THE SECOND ATTACK—VICTORY.

Manders' whole appearance was altered. His loose coat was now open, his linen looked crumpled and disarranged, his hair dishevelled and uncared-for. His face was pale and full of passion; his lips quivered and his dark eyes glared at Mr. Bourchier. He appeared striving to utter some words which the intensity of his palpable agitation hindered from leaving his lips. He seemed powerless for the time to do more than lift his hand and point at his companion.

He was, indeed, a good actor—so good that he did what only great actors can do—carried his audience away—so good that Mr. Bourchier for the time forgot that it was not the son of the dead man standing before him, and by his gestures calling down the wrath of Heaven on his father's murderer—so good that, in spite of every effort, the guilty man felt his forehead grow clammy; and did what he cursed himself for doing, shrunk and quailed before the avenger. It was but for a second, yet long enough to show the actor that his art would triumph.

"Murderer!" he hissed out, approaching nearer to Philip Bourchier—"murderer of an innocent man!"

Mr. Bourchier recovered. The sound of the man's voice recalled him to himself.

"You are mad, or drunk," he said, in a voice almost steady.

"I am neither mad nor drunk, and you know it. Listen—I saw my father—I saw John Boucher last night. Was I dreaming? Yes I may have been dreaming, although I was awake. This, then, was my dream." Then, fixing his eyes full on Mr. Bourchier's face, yet throwing into them an expression as though he saw nothing except mental visions, the speaker, with all the modulations of his beautiful voice brought in proper play, proceeded, and his listener's horror grew and grew as the pretended vision was revealed to him.

"It was a moonlight night—nearly a full moon. The road was light as day. It was a hill—the bottom of a steep hill—young fir-trees and undergrowth covering each side of it. As I stood there I saw a dog-cart coming to me. It halted just where I stood. Two men were in it, and the moonlight showed me the face of each, and one was the face of my father. The man driving stopped the horse—both men seemed to talk for a short time—then the man driving gave my father the reins to hold. I saw a flash, heard a shot, and my father fell from the seat to the road, dying, and his eyes met mine, but I was spell-bound and could not move. The other man sprung down, took a carriage-lamp, gazed into his victim's face, and rifled his pockets, the moon the while shining brighter than ever I had seen it."

* * * * *

So on and on, warming to his work as he got in full swing—describing with painful accuracy every action, every detail of that fatal night—still with his eyes fixed on Mr. Bourchier's face, his clear voice still ringing in his ears like an knell for dying honor. On and on he went with merciless exactness, till, as a climax, he hurled at the listener—"And the face of the man I saw in the moonlight was the face I am looking at now."

Latent superstition is natural in a greater or less degree to every man. Some may at last get rid of it, but many who scoff at visions and supernatural appearances have yet the lingering doubt whether, after all, there may not be something in them. The involuntarily creeping of the flesh and bristling of the hair which happens even to the most skeptical, in situations which bring the thought of something uncanny to the mind, testifies to the truth of the assertion I make, that all men, more or less, have superstition—the extent of which can only be known, even to themselves, under the peculiar circumstances.

It was so with the listener—his horror grew and grew, as every act of his, every trifling act which was so branded upon his memory, was, by word and gesture reproduced by the man who stated he learned them in a vision—who stood near him and thrilled him through and through with his accusing voice. Can we wonder that Mr. Bourchier fell into the trap, and in spite of skepticism as to things supernatural, was bound to feel that, unless it was revealed by some higher power than human, no one could have depicted the scene? Can we wonder that, as his horror culminated with the last sentence hurled at him, he leaned over the table and covered his face with his hands, striving to shut out what seemed to him a frightful dream?

There was dead silence in the room for some moments while Mr. Bourchier kept his face hidden and by attitude and manner confessed his guilt. He was not a religious man, but, like many others who disbelieve in the blessings of Heaven, had a lurking belief in its punishments. So, for a while, he sat and made no further sign. Then the first law of nature, self-preservation, asserted itself, and, by an effort, he strove to collect his shattered forces and present the best front he could to the enemy. He raised his head and attempted to smile.

"Excuse me," he said; "I have been far from well lately, and your wild words"—then he ventured to look across at Digby Bourchier and saw the trap he had fallen into.

The young man was sitting in a graceful, careless attitude; every trace of his passion and righteous indignation had vanished, but in place of them his lips wore a mocking smile, and his eyes an expression of triumph which spoke volumes to Mr. Bourchier.

"Guilty conscience," said the avenger, almost cheerfully. "Terrible thing a guilty conscience must be, I guess. Never thought you'd have thrown up your hand in that fashion so soon."

There was a very strong American twang in his voice now.

Philip Bourchier was trembling with rage—he scarcely knew what he was about—his one idea was vengeance. With a shaking hand he tried to open a drawer in front of him. Manders' keen eye watched every motion.

'No you don't," he said, thrusting his right hand into his breast. "Where I come from we make it a point to shoot first when we can."

He was right to be wary, for, at that moment, heedless of consequences, Philip Bourchier would have shot him like a dog, and never regretted the act.

"Now," said Manders, "sit up and let us talk like sensible men who don't believe in visions. Shall I speak first?"

Mr. Bourchier said nothing.

"It happened that I found a man last night who saw my father killed as I described it to you. You know if it's correct or not."

"He was no more your father than I am;" said Mr. Bourchier.

"Look here, Mr. Bourchier, I say he's my father; and you say you didn't murder him. When you can prove that, I'll prove the other fast enough."

"Who was the fellow who told you this tale?" asked Mr. Bourchier; "for, if it was known to one, why not to all?"

"Never mind him—I can find him when I want him. Don't you be afraid; I'll stop his mouth all right."

His hearer shuddered—not so much from fear, but because he realized he was at the mercy of his companion.

"Although you shot my father, I don't want to be vindictive. You do what's right to the son, and we'll make things comfortable."

"You are not John Bourcher's son."

"I say I am. I have every paper establishing my rights. They were all in my father's pocketbook; the one he had that night."

"How did you get that book?" Mr. Bourchier had now given up all attempts to deny his guilt.

"It was forwadred through the post by some farmer, I suppose,

General News and Notes

A shingle machine in Thompson's mill, Orillia, has made a record of 218,000 cut in one week.

It is estimated that the cut of lumber at the Chaudiere this year will not be one-half of last year's output.

A Hacking Cough disturbs rest.—Use Baird's Balsam of Horehound.

Over 100,000 trees in forest reserves in South Australia have lately been destroyed by grasshoppers.

Baird's Balsam of Horehound is not an experiment; established over 50 years.

Mr. Gladstone is not the only famous woodman. It is reported that the Czar of Russia is very foud of woodchopping.

A Pacific coast timber and lumber dealer who located a mill in a South American state vows that brush will grow there a height of six feet in one day succeeding a night's rain.

A Common Origin.

ALL skin diseases of whatever name or nature are caused by impure blood. Burdock Blood Bitters is a natural foe to impure Blood, removing all foul humors from a common pimple to the worst scrofulous sore.

Under the reciprocity treaty with Spain covering trade with Cuba and Porto Rico, United States' lumber which has heretofore paid a duty of from $4.60 to $5 a thousand is admitted free.

The Voice of The People.

In every part of Canada the voice of the people rules, and the voice of the people endorses Burdock Blood Bitters as the best and surest blood purifier known. Nothing drives out boils, blotches, humors, sores and impurity so quickly as B. B. B., and perfect health with bright clear skin always follows its use.

At Fleming's mill, San Bernandino, Cal., recently was cut a pine log from which 18,334 feet of lumber was cut. The average price of this lumber in San Bernandino is $20 per thousand feet.

Several Seasons.

"For several seasons I hava used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry and find that it makes a perfect cure even of the severest attacks of summer complaint and diarrhœa. It is as precious as gold"—Mrs. F. C. Winger, Fonthill, Ont.

Enormous fires have been raging in the forests in the vicinity of Toulon, France, and a great quantity of valuable timber has been destroyed. Three thousand acres are already reported as consumed by the flames.

A Wonderful flesh Producer.

This is the title given to Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil by many thousands who have taken it. It not only gives flesh and strength by virtue of its rich nutritious properties, but creates an appetite for food. Use it and try your weight. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable. Sold by all Druggists, at 50c. and $1.00

A Berlin surgeon discovered that water is an anaesthetic.

A Great Event

In one's life is the discovery of a remedy for some long-standing malady. The poison of Scrofula is in your blood. You inherited it from your ancestors. Will you transmit it to your offspring? In the great majority of cases, both Consumption and Catarrh originate in Scrofula. It is supposed to be the primary source of many other derangements of the body. Begin at once to cleanse your blood with the standard alterative,

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For several months I was troubled with scrofulous eruptions over the whole body. My appetite was bad, and my system so prostrated that I was unable to work. After trying several remedies in vain, I resolved to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and did so with such good effect that less than one bottle and strength. The rapidity of the cure astonished me, as I expected the process to be long and tedious."—Frederico Mariz Fernandes, Villa Nova de Gaya, Portugal.

Restored My Health

"For many years I was a sufferer from scrofula, until about three years ago, when I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, since which the disease has entirely disappeared. A little child of mine, who was troubled with the same complaint, has also been cured by this medicine."—H. Brandt, Avoca, Nebr.
