—I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the dice.—
Rich. III.

This seems to have been Shakespeare's rebuff to a life insurance agent. All wrong, Mr. Shakespeare, and an agent of the D. S. F. Life Association would have "pricked the bubble." You could take the risk on your house, though, no doubt, you have that insured; but when you refuse to insure your life, it was your wife and children, not yourself, who had to stand the hazard of your desperate cast.

Sears, and united with the 1st Hillsboro church; and subsequently became connected with the Valley church, of which he remained a member until death. During the 45 years of his christian life he was an active member of the church, and even when prevented by age and disease from attending the house of God, he did not lose his anxiety for the welfare of Zion. In his last illness, though he suffered much, yet his faith was strong in his God, and he longed to depart and be with Christ. Our brother leaves a family of 3 sons and 3 daughters to mourn the loss of a kind father. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. M. Grose.

He professed faith in Christ in early life and united with the Baptist church in Bedeque, of which he remained a very worthy member till his removal by death to the church above. As an earnest worker in the church and Sabbath school he was ready to aid in whatever was for the advancement of the cause of God, which he so ardently loved. As a member of the community his genial disposition, kindness of manner, and consistency of deportment, as well as uprightness of character, won for him the good will and respect of all. "For him to live was Christ, and to die was gain."

Yarmouth, March 19. G. E. DAY.

Acadia Missionary Society.

Many former members of this society will be glad to know that it flourishes still. The monthly meetings are now held on Sunday instead of on Wednesday evening as formerly. At the last meeting, on the 18th inst., a thoughtful and interesting address was delivered by Rev. H. Foshay, of Windsor. After making reference to the time when he was a student here, and to the students of that day, the living and the deceased, Mr. Foshay said: "Christianity is essentially a missionary religion. The Lord's people have been slow in apprehending this. The Old Testament opens with a broader view of the purposes of God regarding the human race than the chosen people were prepared to receive. As the plan was unfolded with the passing centuries still it was imperfectly understood. After the advent of Christ the same imperfect vision characterized the intimate disciples. Illumination in regard to the kingdom did not come to the apostles till the manifestation of the Spirit at the Pentecostal season. Even after this Peter needed special enlightenment in respect to the privileges open to the Gentiles. Paul appears to have been specially called to show what great blessings were made ready for all men through faith in Christ. The marvellous extension of the Gospel among the nations of the earth in the first century after the death of Christ was owing to the fact that the church had perceived the essential character of the Christian religion, and had been brought into vitalizing sympathy with it. The truth was obscured or lost for a time: hence a church in union with and under control of the state, and a period of superstition and darkness for Christendom. At length earnest souls apprehended once more the truth of salvation by faith and were moved to carry the gospel wherever they might find opportunity. This introduced the period of modern missions, in which the triumphs of the church have equalled those of its primitive period. Even a few years ago, christians were praying that idolatrous nations might be opened to the truth. Now the world is inviting christian labor. The call is for men and means to accept the fields that are ready for the harvest. Never were the hearts of so many young men and women drawn to missionary work. It is a glorious time in which to live. The purposes of God will be fulfilled. We may rest on that, and be strong." He closed with some valuable practical suggestions to any who might be intending to become missionaries. Of course the foregoing is merely an outline of the address. The interest of the meeting was increased by Essays, by Messrs. C. H. McIntyre and J. P. Raymond.

In the evening, Mr. Feenay preached in the Baptist church, by request of Rev. Dr. Higgins. The pastor of Windsor Church will always be well received in Wolfville.
