Miscellaneous.

HINTS ON HARVESTING BUCKWHEAT.—The excellence of buckwheat flour depends chiefly on the management of the grain between the time of ripening and grinding. The common way of treating buckwheat effectually prevents making good flour, it being allowed to remain in the swarth for several weeks, when it should never be suffered to lie longer than a day or two, and it is decidedly better for the grain to rake it and set it on end as fast as it is cradled. Much less grain will be wasted by shelling out; the straw will cure and dry out sooner, and make better fodder; the crop will be ready for threshing or housing in less time, and the grain will yield a much better quality of flour. It is especially injurious to the grain to be exposed to storms before it is set up, for dirt is spattered all over the grain by the falling of large raindrops. This makes the flour dark-coloured and gritty. Wetting and drying the grain several times destroys the "life" of the flour. It will never be as white, nor make so good cakes, but will be sticky and the cakes clammy, like the flour of sprouted wheat.

COOKING CABBAGE.—Cabbage is a capital vegetable, and coming so generally into favor that the half-heathen practice of murdering it in cooking in the majority of cases, ought to subject the cabbage cooks to an indictment for vegetable slaughter. This dowsing into a pot of a whole head of cabbage, unwashed, unsearched, uncut, boiling half an hour and serving up half raw, is an abomination most infamous.

A cabbage-head ought always to be thoroughly washed, then severely searched for lurking lice, bugs, and nasty worms, then cut through from the top towards the stump part, leaving enough to hold the head together—put the head into a net, and then into a steamer and steam two hours with a piece of nice, fat salt pork boiling underneath the steamer.

Cabbage half cooked is an abominable, unwholesome cow fodder—properly cooked, it is palatable, nutritious, and wholesome.

FARM ACCOUNT—No farmer is true to his own interests who does not keep just as accurate accounts of his business as the best "business man." It is not so easy to keep accounts as where everything has a definite money value, but it may and should be done; and after a little practice we may soon get in the way of placing a just value on the labor of men and animals, our own time, etc. One of the most important things is a correct inventory of everything that has value—of investments and stock in trade, of debts and dues, of live stock and implements, of manures in the ground and in the compost heaps, etc., etc. Were a farmer only to take a good inventory once a year, and keep no other accounts, it would be an invaluable aid to him in regulating his future management.

MAKING PICKLES.—In the first place I wash them quite clean, without rubbing them, and place them in my jar and fill up with cold vinegar; put in quite a large piece of alum, and tie up ground cinnamon, cloves, and allspice in a bag, and in a week they are fit for use; the alum will make the scum rise and take it of with my hand; sometimes I would turn off the first vinegar and put in new; if the vinegar is good there is no need of it; you will need pure cider vinegar; I don't believe in any other kind of vinegar. I don't salt my cucumbers, as the salt kills the vinegar.

A colored servant sweeping out a hotel boarder's room, found a sixpence, which he carried to its owner. "You keep it for your honesty,' said he. Shortly after, he missed his gold pencil case, and inquired of the servant if he had seen it.

"Yes sar," was the reply.

"And what did you do with it?"

"Keep um for my honesty, sar."

What odd names some mortals are blessed with! A family in Michigan actually named their last child Finis, supposing that it was their last, but they afterwards happened to have a daughter, and two sons, whom they called Addenda, Appendix, and Supplement. A man in Pensylvania called his son James Also, and the third William Likewise.

A "GREEN" ISLANDER.—In a criminal court, the counsel, dissatisfied with his want of success with an Irish witness, complained to the court. Paddy replied—"Sure, an'I'm no lawyer, yer honor; and the spalpane only wants to puzzle me." "Come, now, do you swear you are no lawyer?" said the counsel. "Faix, an' I do, and yez may swear the same about yourself, too, without fear of perjury."

☞ "A lass! a lass!" exclaimed an old bachelor who wanted to marry. "Alas! alas!" he cried, after he had been married awhile.
