A post office bag was robbed at Wassis, Sunbury Co., a few days ago. The driver of the mail from Rushagornish to Wassis station is Amos Grass. On the day of the robbery, on his arrival at the latter place, as is his custom, he placed the mail bag in the wagon of James Humble, driver of the mail between Wassis and Oromocto. When the mail reached Oromocto, Postmaster McLean discovered that the Rushagornish bag had been opened and the contents extracted. Humble went to Rushagornish and learned that two registered letters had been enclosed in the bag that had been opened. Inquiry at Wassis station showed that a lad named Poor, hailing from Fredericton, had been lurking about the station for a few days, and suspicion pointed to him. A boy who lives at Wassis, stated that Poor and he went into the barn where Humble's mail wagon was, and that Poor suggested the idea of robbing the mail, to which the other disgented Poor cut a hole in the bottom of the bag and extracted the two registered letters, dividing the contents with young Segee. The two lads were noticed around together afterwards, and seemed to have lots of money. and it was this fact that caused them to be suspected. Young Segee's father paid the amount claimed to have been in the letters—$18, and the matter was allowed to drop.

About 400 Oddfellows and their friends, including 75 of the Boston brethren with Carter's Band, and the 62nd Fusiliers Band, came up by boat from St. John, Thursday afternoon, arriving here at 3.30 o'clock. The members of Victoria Lodge with the Fredericton Brass Band and hundreds of citizens, welcomed the visitors at the wharf, and a procession with Mr. Geo. I. Gunter as chief marshall, and Mr. J. D. Fowler assistant, was formed and paraded some of the principal streets. breaking up at Parliament Square, where warm addresses of welcome were delivered by P. G. M. John Richards, Chief Justice Allen and Mayor Hazen. During the afternoon, Carter's Band, one of the finest musical organizations ever heard in Fredericton, gave a concert on the square, the fine music attracting hundreds of people to the spot. The visiting Oddfellows were shown every courtesy by their brethren here, and by the citizens generally, and left for home at 7 o'clock the same evening. It was a red letter day for Oddfellows in Fredericton, and that the Boston men were delighted with their visit, is assured by a letter received by Mr. W. A. Quinn from Major Palmer, who says: "Everyone is elated with the grand reception at Fredericton, and you can say that your people have placed us under obligations which we can never fully repay."

THE NEWS FROM MILVILLE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

MILVILLE, July 30th,—The haymakers are improving the time in making "hay while the sun shines." The farmers say their hay crop will not be as good as last year. The weather is very fine with an occasional shower.....Mowing machines and horse rake agents are having a good harvest around here this summer.....In a previous issue we spoke of needed repairs on the station house, and this week can say that a crew of men have been busy all the week on repairing the same. A new platform has been built and the station house somewhat fitted up. It adds much to the appearance of the place.....Mr. Robert Lockhard who has been spending a few years in the lumber woods of Michigan, is now on a visit to his home here. He will spend a few weeks with his friends when he will return to his field of labor in the same State.....It is rumored that a branch of the Salvation Army will visit the village some time in the near future. No doubt they will receive a hearty welcome, as a band was organized here the other evening, but for want of followers was not successfully carried out.....Rev. G. M. Campbell delivered an interesting lecture on temperance in the church on Tuesday evening. The object of Mr. Campbell's visit was to endeavor to organize a lodge of Sons of Templars in this place.....The Misses Palmer, Mills and Smith who have been spending a few years in the neighboring State, are now on a visit to their friends here and their home in Maplewood.....One day last week a Mr. Fowler of Nortondale went out cow hunting and lost his way in the woods. Search had been kept up for him for two or three days. The party were rewarded for their searching by the lost putting in an appearance yesterday (Sunday.) He had, no doubt, done much wandering about as he came out of the woods on the N. B. Railway just above the station here a few miles..... Frank Braun a young son of George Braun, some four or five weeks ago fell and broke his arm. The injured limb was successfully set by Dr. Owens and was doing well. Last evening he again fell and broke the same arm, which was again attended by the Doctor, who reports this morning that the boy is doing well.....J. S. Knight, in the interest of W. C. Pitfield & Co., dry goods merchants of St. John, is now at the Millville House.....Rev. B. H. Trafton, though not on his regular appointment, preached an interesting sermon to a large congregation Sunday evening.

A NOTED MAN'S DEATH.

The Record of a Former Frederictonian Recalled.

Recect despatches record the death in England, of a notable man, the Rev. G. R. Gleig, who was for nearly thirty years Chaplain General of the forces; born in 1796, the son of a Scotch bishop and receiving a primary education in Glasgow, was sent to Balliol College, Oxford. In 1812, he entered the army and joined the forces of the Duke of Wellington in Spain in 1813, serving in the 85th Light Infantry, and was present at the siege of San Sebastian, the passage of the Bidassoa, the battle of Nivelle, where he was twice wounded, the battle of the Nive, where he was again wounded, and the investment of Bayonne. He afterwards served in the American war at Bladensburg, Baltimore, New Orleans, the capture of Washington and Fort Bowyer. He afterwards returned to England to keep his terms at Oxford, where he took his degree in 1819. In 1820, he entered Holy Orders. In 1844, Mr. Gleig was made Chaplain of Chelsea, and after two years promoted to be Chaplain General of the forces, which position he held till 1875, during which time he held the appointment of Inspector General of Military Schools, in consequence of a scheme devised by him for the education of soldiers. Among the many literary works written by Mr. Gleig may be mentioned "The Subaltern," "Campaigns at Washington and New Orleans," "The lives of Military Commanders," "The History of India," "The History of the Bible," "The Story of the Battle of Waterloo," "The lives of Lord Olive, Warren Hastings and the Duke of Wellington," "Memoirs of Sir Thomas Munro," "Traditions of Chelsea Hospital," "Chronicles of Waltham," "County Curate," "A Military History of Great Britain," "The Soldiers help to Divine Truth," "The Great Problem." It was Mr. Gleig's life of Warren Hastings that formed the subject of Lord Macaulay's most popular essay. He died at the ripe old age af 92 years, at Stratfield Turgio, near Windfield, North Hants, retaining almost to the very last his faculties and his interest in public and private affairs. Thus passed away nearly the last survivor of the great Duke's Peninsular Army, having enjoyed through life the friendship of his old commander, and of his son, the second Duke of Wellington.

In relation to the above notice of the death of the Rev. G. R. Gleig, it may be fitting to allude to a passage in "The Subaltern," in which he eloquently describes (as an eye witness) the leading of the British flotilla across the fearful bar of the Adour by the late Captain Cheyne, R. N., who now lies in the Fredericton Cemetery, and who was for many years one of our well-known citizens. It appears from this description by Mr. Gleig, that 59 lives were lost in this most perilous enterprise, and that Captain (then Lieutenant Cheyne, R. N., was the first to touch the shore under the ringing cheers of the assembled army and sixty ships of the British fleet, the Duke of Wellington (says Mr. Gleig) being present at the time. It appears that Sir Archibald Allison in his History of Europe, accidentally gave Captain Cheyne a secondary position, but on Mr. Gleig writing to him, Allison acknowledged his error, owing to the naval despatches not having been published) and announced to Mr. Gleig a correction for the next edition. This was very happily published, announced in turn to Commander Cheyne, R. N., by Mr. Gleig, who, presiding at one of his lectures on the discovery of the North Pole, on introducing him, turned round and said: "It will doubtless give you great pleasure Commander Cheyne to be informed now, for the first time, that Sir Archibald Allison has, through my representation, corrected the error in his history, and given your father his rightful place as leader in that terrible affair."

It may be stated, in conclusion, that the late Capt. Cheyne had been over one hundred and fifty times under fire of the enemy, including actions with smugglers.

In future the Scottish volunteers are to be organized into two brigades, the Highland and the South of Scotland Brigade, and Lord Melgund, who is now the commander of the Border Mounted Rifles, the crack mounted rifle corps of Great Britain, is to have the command of the Highland Brigade. Lord Melgund is well known in Canada.

Among the pains and aches cured with marvellous rapidity by Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, is ear ache. The young are especially subject to it, and the desirability of this Oil as a family remedy is enhanced by the fact that it is admirably adapted not only to the above ailment, but also to the hurts, disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat, to which the young are especially subject.

A TERRIBLE CALAMITY.

One of the saddest drowning accidents ever heard of, happened Thursday afternoon at the village of L'Assomption, Quebec, by which Mr. Joseph Landreville lost four young sons, aged 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. The fact of such a terribly sudden calamity having fallen upon one of the most respected citizens of the village, has thrown the whole neighborhood into a state of gloom, while the warmest sympathy goes out for the surviving members of this sadly afflicted family. The four lads had, during the forenoon, been playing on a raft of logs near what was known as the Galarnean bridge, which crosses L'Assomption river, and on more than one occasion had been warned of the danger that threatened them. They were told that it was not safe to venture towards the outer edge of the raft, as the logs were not held together very securely and their rolling about rendered it decidedly for a grown person much more children, to move about on them. In the afternoon, however, the boys were on the logs again, when suddenly the youngest of the four slipped, and with a terrible cry of distress, plunged head foremost into the deep water. A second had scarcely passed when another brother stretched out his hand, which was grasped by the drowning lad, but instead of being able to effect a rescue he too was precipitated into the water. The two remaining boys, seeing the danger to which their brothers were exposed, do not seem to have given the slightest thought for their own safety, but at once sprang upon the rolling logs and made a desperate attempt to save the two who had just fallen into the water. In their hurry they seem to have caused the logs to roll still more, and in far less time than it takes to describe the awful event Mr. Landreville's four sons were struggling for their young lives in the L'Assomption river. It appears that when the two last victims went under the open space between the logs closed up by the cedars coming together, thus shutting off all possibility of the poor boys' escape when coming to the surface. A gentleman who was in a field a long distance from the scene of the calamity, and who arrived too late to be of any service, says it was a terrible spectacle to see one after another of the brave little lads go down to a watery grave. As soon as help could be secured the logs were taken away, and search was at once commenced for the bodies. At last they were found, and as they were brought to the shore and placed side by side on the grassy river bank, the feelings of the bereaved father, who had already lost his wife, can be more easily imagined than described. As it was not considered necessary to hold an inquest, the funeral took place Friday morning at the parish church of L'Assomption, and those who were present say that it has been a long time since anything so impressive has been witnessed in that locality. The four coffins, containing all that was mortal of the ill-fated children, were buried by the side of their mother in the village churchyard.

A remarkable story has been developed by the exhuming of the remains of George Stutt, who conducted a saloon in Lowell, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. He was aged 25 years, and was supposed to have died of pneumonia in the forenoon of January 8, 1888. January 10 was the day first set for the burial of the remains, but, acting upon the advice of Dr. W. C. Green, the attending physician, it was decided to have the body interred on the 9th, the day following the supposed death, and accordingly the burial took place in Bethlehem cemetery on the afternoon of Monday, January 9. Nothing further was thought of the matter, nor was the possibility of the young man not being dead broached, until the remains were taken up on Tuesday last to be transferred to the family lot, which had been secured in Calvary cemetery. Only the two sisters of the deceased, accompanied by several intimate friends, were present when the coffin was taken from the grave for removal, and they expressed a desire to be allowed to once more gaze upon the face of their brother and friend before it should be lowered to its last resting place. The request was granted, and when the lid of the coffin was raised, those who had gathered around for the purpose of viewing the remains, witnessed a sight which they will remember with a cold shudder to the last day of their lives. The glass in the coffin, just under the lid, had been smashed to atoms, and the splinters were in the bottom of the coffin and lying around the dead man's head, while the body was turned completely over in the coffin, face downward, with the hands drawn up tightly against the breast. The face was considerably cut with the broken glass and presented a not very pleasing object to gaze upon. The sisters of the deceased then claimed that the body had been buried alive, but William Landvogt, the undertaker who had charge of and had embalmed the remains on the night of the death, said that it could not be so, but that the body had been turned over and the glass broken by the careless lowering of the coffin into the grave, and also that on the night of January 8, he had, in embalming the body, injected into the veins and calves of the legs four ounces of arsenic in a solution, and that the windows in the room in which the body lay had been left open on that night and had there been any life in the body at that time the intense cold would have of itself caused death.
