Broke into the inclosures of Maj. John Coffin,

A Roan MARE, three years old, no brand; having been advertised for some time past, therefore if not called for by the first of February, she will be sold at Public Auction, to pay cost and charges.

Nerrs-Pier, 1st Jany. 1785.

The great demand for his Excellency's the Governor's speech, to the Hon. the General Assembly of this province, at the opening of their first session, after the whole edition of our last Gazette was disposed of, induced the printer to gratify those who have not yet seen it, with a re-publication of that interesting speech.

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL AND GENTLEMEN OF THE ASSEMBLY.

A Meeting of the several branches of the legislature, for the first time in this new province, is an event of so great importance, and must prove so conducive to its stability and prosperity, that I feel the highest satisfaction at seeing His Majesty's endeavors, to procure the inhabitants every protection of a free government, in so fair a way of being finally successful.

The preceding winter was necessarily spent in guarding the people against those numerous wants incident to their peculiar situation, and the summer has been employed as well in the prosecution of this essential business, as in dividing the province and establishing the several Officers and Courts of Justice requisite for the security of the former while engaged in raising a support for his family: And now that the season of the year renders travelling commodious and allows you leisure to attend the public business without interruption to your private affairs, I have called you together in compliance with the royal instructions, that you may put the finishing hand to the arduous task of organizing the province, by re-enacting such of the Nova-Scotia laws as are applicable to our situation, and passing such bills as you shall judge best calculated to maintain our rapid advance towards a complete establishment in this country.

Gentlemen of the Council

That branch of the laws of the old province which relates to crimes and misdemeanors I would recommend to your first consideration; they are for the most part, if not altogether, extracted from the statute law of England, and will become our best security for the quiet and permanent enjoyment of private liberty and property. As it may in some instances perhaps admit of a doubt what part of those laws extend to this province, and which are lost by the erecting of a distinct administration it will be most eligible, by renewing them, to leave no possibility of uncertainty in a matter so nearly affecting the happiness of individuals and peace of the community. Those laws also which relate to the execution of justice, civil and criminal, make another important object of your attention; and as the assistance of the judges will be required in forming or reviewing them, they will of course, I suppose, originate with you.

Gentlemen of the Assembly,

Among the numerous subjects which will fall under your consideration after you have adopted such acts of the province of Nova Scotia as you may find necessary or proper, I would particularly point out a bill providing for the election of members to serve in general assembly, and for regulating all such elections, as well as determining the qualification of electors. A law also for registering anew all grants of lands, lying within this province, and made before our division from Nova Scotia, is necessary for ascertaining titles to estates, and will prove of the greatest use in their preservation—I am therefore instructed to recommend it.

Gentlemen of the Council and Gentlemen of the Assembly.

I shall decline entering further into the particular objects that may be proper for your consideration in the course of the present session; but shall leave them to be occasionally communicated by message: in the mean time I have the fullest confidence, that you will enter on the public business with a hearty disposition to join me in whatever may tend to the welfare of this infant colony.

The liberality of the British government to the unfortunate loyalists in general, and the peculiar munificence and parental care of our most gracious sovereign, to those of them settled in New Brunswick, call loudly for every return that an affectionate and favoured people can make; and I am persuaded you cannot better shew your gratitude on this behalf for the many unexampled instances of national and royal bounty, than by promoting sobriety, industry, and the practice of religion, by discouraging all faction and party distinctions amongst us, and inculcating the utmost harmony between the newly arrived loyalists and those of his Majesty's subjects formerly resident in the province. And gentlemen, it is with real pleasure I declare, that our prospects are so favorable that your exertions for those beneficial purposes can scarcely fail to render this asylum of loyalty the envy of the neighbouring states, and that, by exercising the arts of peace, they who have taken refuge here will not only be abundantly recompensed for their losses, but be enabled to enjoy their connection with the parent state and retain their allegiance for the best of kings, which their conduct has proved they prize above all consideration.
