IS THERE NO ROOM IN THE ANGEL LAND?

[A short time since, the writer listened to an interesting discourse by a Methodist preacher, in which he related the following touching incident: A mother who was preparing some flour to bake into bread, left it for a few moments, when little Mary, with childish curiosity to see what it was, took hold of the dish, which fell to the floor, spilling the contents. The mother struck the child a severe blow, saying, with anger, that she was always in the way. Two weeks after, little Mary sickened and died. On her death bed, while delirious, she asked her mother, if there would be room for her among the angels. "I was always in your way, mother—you had no room for little Mary! And will I be in the angels' way?" The broken-hearted mother then felt no sacrifice too great, could she have saved her child.]

Is there no room among the angels
For the spirit of your child?
Will they take your little Mary
In their loving arms so mild?
Will they ever love me fondly,
As my story books have said?
Will they find a home for Mary—
Mary numbered with the dead?
Tell me truly, darling mother,
Is there room for such as me?
Will I gain the home of spirits,
And the shining angels see?

I have sorely tried you, mother—
Been to you a constant care;
And you will not miss me, mother,
When I dwell among the fair;
For you have no room for Mary,
She was ever in your way,
And she fears the good will shun her;
Will they, darling mother, say?
Tell me—tell me, truly, mother,
Ere life's closing hour doth come,
Do you think that they will keep me,
In the shining angel's home?

I was not so wayward, mother,
Not so very, very bad,
But what tender love would nourish,
And make Mary's heart so glad.
Oh! I yearned for pure affection
In this world of bitter woe;
And I longed for bliss immortal
In that land where I must go.
Tell me once again, dear mother,
Ere you take the parting kiss,
Will the angels bid me welcome
To that world of perfect bliss?

Miscellaneous.

"THE GREAT SEAMAN."

Charlie Davis had made up his mind, or at least he thought he had, to be great.

'If I live I shall be a great man,' he was very often heard to say.

But if anybody asked him 'In what way shall you be great?' he did not know.

He had not decided. He was only at present sure of one thing, and that was that he would be great somehow.

So when Charlie turned over the leaves of his history book, and saw these words, "The Great Seaman," his attention was immediately arrested, and he sat down to read the whole account.

He found that this name had been given to one Sebastian Cabot, who was born at Bristol, so long ago as the year 1447. His father, John Cabot, was a wealthy Venetian merchant, whose business obliged him frequently to live in Bristol. He, John Cabot, received a patent from King Henry VII., which enabled him and his three sons to sail on a voyage of discovery in the eastern, western, or northern sea. Sebastian was the most celebrated navigator of the family. They had a fleet of five ships which were fitted out at their own expense. In the year 1497, they sailed away to the west, and Sebastian was the first to discover the American continent, almost fourteen months before Columbus saw the mainland.—After they had returned to England, Sebastian Cabot made a second voyage, and coasted America from Labrador to the southern United States. He passed the straits, and entered the great bay which was afterwards called Hudson's Bay. During Cabot's voyages he obtained a knowledge of the fisheries of Newfoundland; and many mariners from England and France afterwards visited them. Sebastian lived to a great age, and made so many discoveries, and was so useful a man, that he he was called as he deserved to be, "The Great Seaman," and Edward VI. gave him a pension.

'That is it! that will do for me!' exclaimed Charlie when he had read. 'I will be called 'The Great Seaman.' Of course everything has not been found out yet, so when I am a man I will sail away in a fleet of ships, and discover new worlds.'

Charlie was so delighted with the idea that he told his friends, and companions, and playfellows all about it. They seemed rather inclined to laugh at him; but he did not mind that much. He was given to dreaming, and many a pleasant picture was drawn in his own mind of beautiful ships sailing over blue waters, while beautiful mountains and green fields could be seen which nobody else had ever found before.

'Captain Charles Davis sounds very well; and all the men must like me, and be very obedient to me, of course; and I shall get immensely rich, and shall plant the flag of England on every shore, and when I come home everybody will want to speak to me, and no doubt Queen Victoria will send for me to her palace. And how proud all my friends will be!—and well they may!'

It was pleasant to think of, certainly, and if wishing and even planning it all could have made Charlie great, no doubt he would have been so.

But, unfortunately, wishing is of very little use indeed. And Charlie might wish for twenty years without ever getting any nearer if he did nothing but wish.

And did he?

"Well, he talked a great deal about it. And his conversation proved that either his knowledge was very defective, or the countries that Charlie would discover would be very strange lands indeed.

'John,' he said one day to a little boy, 'will you give me those two big marbles of yours for two of my little ones?'

'No,' said John, quite promptly; "I know better than that, I hope. Why, my two are worth half-a-dozen of your little ones.'

'Oh, do change, John, and then when I am 'The Great Seaman' I will bring you home a splendid parrot in a gilt cage.'

John shook his head.

'You will forget all about the marbles by that time.'

'No, I won't. But I'll tell you what I will do; I will take you with me, and you shall sail in one of my ships to the land I am going to find out. I know all about it; it is a beautiful land, and you can sail along the rivers on great lumps of ice, and catch salmon, and cod, and eels, and whales, just as easily as you can catch minnows here. And you shall ride on whichever you like, a camel, or an elephant, or a reindeer, or a white bear, or fly along upon an eagle. Won't you change with me now, John?'

'No; it is so long to wait. If you had your grand country here now it would be different; but perhaps there is no such land, and then what a silly I shall have been to part with my marbles.'

'I know there is, and when I come home and show you some of the things you will wish you had changed with me.'

One day Charlie's master complained to his father

'Your son is so backward in geography, it seems as if he will not learn it.'

So his father said—"Charlie, you cannot possibly be a great seaman if you don't study geography. No one is clever at navigating unless he knows all about countries, and rivers, and where they may be found.'

'But I don't like geography, father.'

"You must learn it whether you will or not'

But Charlie did not intend to work very hard, and he began to think if it was much trouble to be a seaman he would rather be something else.

Just about this time his father took him to the seaside, and they went out in a boat. Charlie felt very cold and uncomfortable, and he was very much frightened too.

'Oh, father, take me back, I shall be drowned!' he cried.

You may be sure that his father laughed at him.

'You will surely never call yourself a great seaman again, Charlie,' he said. 'You have not even courage enough to make a little one. Sebastian Cabot was no coward, and he did not mind work. You are a coward, and you hate work, so you will never be anything great.'

His father was right. Charlie Davis is a man now, but nobody thinks of calling him a great man.

THE PRISONER.

I was once upon the same car with a police officer and his prisoner, a very young man, who was going to Auburn prison for a term of years. He was a fine, handsome, rather elegant-looking youth, well-dressed, and with altogether the air of an educated person. But his wrists were fettered, and as he sat in the corner of the seat, he looked so pale and wretched, so altogether overcome with shame and misery, that all in the car pitied him sincerely.

The officer who had charge of him seemed more sorry for his prisoner than any one else. He spoke to him kindly and politely, drew down the blind when he shrank from the light, and wrapped his plaid more carefully about him when he shivered as the door opened. As the train stopped a few minutes, the officer went out and returned with a cup of coffee, which he tried to make the prisoner drink; but the poor boy only said, "No, thank you, sir," in a grieving voice, and turned away.

"What brought him, to such a pass?" said a gentleman in a low voice as the officer went by on his way back to his seat. "He don't look like a criminal, and he is so young."

"Well, you see, sir, I don't think the poor fellow really meant any harm; but he was easily led, and he fell into bad company." How many a man who has never "meant any harm," has seen cause to rue the day, when he did not resolutely mean to do right, and keep out of bad company?

LINES

Composed on the sickness and death of Mrs. Mary Ann Hicks, by her Husband, William Hicks.

Long hast thou watched my bed,
And smoothed my pillows oft,
For this poor aching head,
With touches kind and soft.

O, smooth it yet again,
As softly as before,
Once, only once, and then
I'll crave thy care no more.

For here I must not stay,
Where I so long have lain,
Through many a restless day,
And many a night of pain.

But bear me gently forth,
Beneath the open sky;
Where on the pleasant earth,
The smiling sunbeams lie.

Then through the coming days,
I need not look to thee
My aching head to raise,
And shift it tenderly.

There sweetly shall I sleep,
Nor wilt thou need to bring,
To cool my parched lips,
Cold water from the spring.

Nor yet the cambric lay
Upon my burning brow,
Nor from my eyelids shade
The light that hurts them now.

Nor watch that none may tread,
With noisy footsteps nigh,
And hover round my bed,
To hear my faintest cry.

And feign a look of cheer
And words of comfort speak,
Yet turn to hide the tear
That gathers on thy cheek.

Then to the sleep I crave,
Resign me, till I see,
The face of him that gave,
His life for you and me.

Then with the setting sun,
Come now and then at eve,
And think of me as one,
For whom thou shouldst not grieve.

Who when the kind release,
From sin and suffering came;
Passed to her appointed place,
In Christ her Saviour's name.

Leave at my side a place,
Where thou shalt lie at last,
And find a resting place,
When thy few years are past.

THE FRENCH CHIMNEY-SWEEPER.

A pastor relates the following incident:

I like to repeat the answer a little sweep gave me in our Sunday school. Knowing that all the children in my class were constantly occupied during the week, I feared the duty of prayer was sometimes neglected. I insisted, that day, on the importance of prayer. At the close I asked a little boy of ten years of age, who led an uncomfortable life in the service of a master-sweep:

"And you, my dear friend, do you ever pray?"

"O yes, Monsieur."

"And when do you do it? You go out very early in the morning do you not?"

"Yes, Monsieur, and we are only half awake when we leave the house. I think about God but can not say I pray then."

"When, then?"

"You see, Monsieur, our Master orders us to mount the chimney quickly, but does not forbid us to rest a little when we are at the top. Then I sit on the chimney and pray."

"And what do you say?"

"Ah, Monsieur, very little. I know no grand words with which to speak to God. Most frequently I only repeat two verses that I have learned at school."

"Which are they?"

My scholar repeated with fervor "God be merciful to me a sinner;" "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."—French S. S. Magazine.

EIGHT REASONS FOR INSURING YOUR LIFE IN THE STAR LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—1. Because it has been established for twenty-six years, a period which is a sufficient test of its stability.
2. Because it has on its Board gentlemen who are known never to lend their influence to an undertaking which is not conducted with the greatest integrity.
3. Because it refers to gentlemen of the greatest eminence in every country, who are ready to vouch for its high position.
4. Because it has put by a large Reserve Fund, $5,000,000, which of itself is more than enough to meet every contingency.
5. Because the Bonuses which have been declared, notwithstanding so large a sum has been put by in reserve, are larger than many offices of similar condition.
6. Because its annual income has hitherto been more than three times the amount of claims which are annually provided for.
7. Because it gives Assurers in addition all those advantages which are made the especial features of other offices.
8. Because it has deposited with the Receiver General $100,000 as a guarantee to Canadian Policy-holders, that all claims will be met with promptitude, and in good faith.
