Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

IT is a terrible disappointment to a chap to go home to get some of mother's cooking and find that sister has just taken a course in a cooking school.

When the baseball season is over the wise fan packs his voice away in moth balls until he again has use for it.

June for rareness has no edge on those fall days so rare that they are raw.

The fool who rocks the boat will probably be succeeded by the fool who waves to the crowd from an aeroplane.

When two schoolgirls make a vow of eternal friendship it is not safe to inquire of one concerning the other next week.

The wise man will not boast of his culinary abilities before his wife lest she give him a job.

It is when mother asks who has been in the jam that the young man takes his first lesson in politics.

Has to Soak Through.

"Why does Jones stay at home so much?"

"To get his wife in good humor."

"Does it take him all that time to get her in good humor?"

"Yes."

"I wonder why?"

"She is such a big woman."

Chance For Management.

"He never thinks of himself."

"No."

"Only of her."

"Yes."

"She will break him of that when they are married."

Bidding For Popularity.

"I wonder why she will gossip so."

"That's easy."

"Doesn't look easy to me."

"She has to do something to make her acquaintances tolerate her."

Distinguishing Mark.

"Why is he such a fool?"

"He?"

"Yes."

"His friends wouldn't know him otherwise."

Chance Before Habits Are Formed.

"My son painted that picture."

"How old is he?"

"Only twenty."

"Oh, well, he may reform!"

Likely a Brass Watch.

"I hear your uncle died and left you a fortune?"

"No; just all he had."

The Terror.

Little Johnny-jump-up, child of tender years
Fills the house in turmoil, always by the ears
Keeps his mother nervous, drives his father wild.
Sets the neighbors guessing, as becomes a child.
Quite inconsequential he appears to be,
But when he is coming better climb a tree
While he may dissemble, it is to deceive.
Be hind-sight the warning—something up his sleeve.
Snakes are in his pockets waiting for a chance
Down your neck to scamper while in wrath you dance.
Toads are his companions, and, as I have heard.
He may let you hold one if you say the word.
Holds to an opinion logic cannot shake
That, concerning windows, they were made to break.
Stones are always handy, much to his delight,
When the fussy owner nowhere is in sight.
If you think he's destined as he goes along
To become a preacher you have guessed it wrong.
He will be a pirate, chilly as the Alps,
Or will roam the prairies, bringing in the scalps.
Aunts and uncles shun him, neighbors shake their heads;
Say they wouldn't trust him when asleep in bed.
But that doesn't matter; in the life of crime
That he joys in leading there's a bully time.
Do not stop to worry; do not be afraid.
That's how we develop, now the race is made.
When he fights his battles in the world, I trow,
He can use the talents he develops now.
Just a normal urchin, nothing more or less,
Nature that endowed him knows the trade, I guess.
Maybe on the morrow when a man of vim
For a place is needed you will vote for him.

The Far East

In a recent article the well known war correspondent, Mr. William Maxwell, throws considerable light on the differences that have arisen between Russia and China regarding the treaty of 1881, and points out that, although open conflict has been temporarily averted, there is every indication of a renewal of the trouble in August next when the disputed treaty expires.

China can no longer fill the role of playing off one power against another. The anxiety recently displayed to come to terms with her powerful and covetous neighbor was entirely dictated by the reflection that for the first time in her relations with the "outer barbarians" China stood alone. Russia has concluded an agreement with Germany that gives the Muscovite a practically free hand in China, and the latter must now face her troubles alone without hope of intervention from Berlin. This is why China so recently sued for peace when the glint of Russian bayonets appeared on the frontier. Can China witnstand the pressure that may be applied in August next to compel her to renew a treaty that is repugnant to her national instincts? Will the rattle of Russian sabres be heard on the streets of the Forbidden City?

The circumstances that led up to threats of Russian invasion are significant The treaty of 1881 expires in August. Russia insists on the renewal of the treaty. China has given notice that she does not desire to renew it. The treaty had its origin in the Mohammedan revolt of 1860, which at that period threatened to disrupt the Chinese Empire. Following this outbreak Russia took up a strong strategic position on her western boundary by the military occupation of the fertile Province of Kuldja, the racial ties between the two Turkestans calling at the time for precautionary measures. But, true to the traditions of the great powers, Rus ia remained in occupation for ten years after the causes that justified her presence on Chinese territory had disappeared.

A treaty was finally arranged whereby Russia, in exchange for commercial and Consular concessions in Ili., Mongolia, and Manchuria, together with navigation rights on the Rivers Amur, Sungari, and Ussuri, withdrew her troops. These concessions, wrung from a weak and unwilling nation, and which secured Russia against the yellow peril in eastern Siberia have never been acquiesced in by the Chinese people, who grow more and more restive under foreign aggressions. To neutralize the effects of a treaty to which she was an unwilling partner China moved whole towns from the interior of Turkestan and Mongolia to the boundaries, and forced the tribesmen from their inland pastures right up to the Russian frontier. Concessions of land and cattle were freely made to encourage Chinese colonization in those regions exploited by Russian merchants, and which, the latter declared, have rendered the treaty of 1881 null and void.

It is to restore the balance of power in Kuldja, and to secure the Russian subjects the extra territorial rights of which they have been deprived, that Russia insists on the renewal of the treaty not only in the letter but in the spirit. China on the other hand, charges Russia with unwarrantable abuses of her treaty rights, and points to aggressions that afford strong presumptive evidence of sinister designs against the integrity of the Chinese Empire.---Tor. Globe.

The Dominion Government will appoint no successor to Radcliffe, the public executioner. This means that sheriffs throughout the Dominion will be called on to mete out the death penalty themselves, or else pay out of their pockets for a substitute. Radcliffe was paid an annual salary of $800 for thu work, this continuing until his death. During the past seven months a man named Ellis has been officiating, but always at the expense of the sheriff.
