Apparently a Mistake

(From the Louisville Courier.)

A story comes from a Kentucky town that is worth repeating. There lives there a woman who says that she has immediate communion with the Almighty. From now and then delivers to those of her town she may a message that she has received from on high. The fact that these messages sometimes take on a very realistic hue does not alter their genuineness, in her opinion.

One day she went into the office of a local own attorney and approached him only as one about to reveal an appalling secret.

"The Lord sent me to you for $25," she announced.

The attorney looked up and smiled.

"There must be a mistake," he replied. "The Lord knows I have

An Election Seventy-Two Years ago, in Charlotte County

A book containing the names of voters and candidates, in Charlotte County, in the year 1837 was left with us a few days ago, and contains some interesting facts concerning the methods in vogue at that time in choosing members of the general assembly. In this election the candidates were:—Thomas Wyer, James Rait, James Brown, George S. Hill, Patrick Clinch, Robert Thompson, W. F. W. Owen. The election began Sept. 25th, and closed at St Andrews Oct. 9th, St. Patrick, St. George, St. David, St. Stephen, West Isles were polling places.

Many of the voters were not allowed to vote for reasons noted after their names:—"hall man," "objected till he brings his deed," "alien," "Jurat and objected." In the election at St. George Sept. 27th, James Rait resigned.

Many names appear that familiar in the town and parish, as Henry Seelye, Hugh Flaherty, George Steen, Chas. Brockway, Guy Clinch, Peter Dewar, Peter Goss, Elliott Munson and others. The result of the election: Wyer, 1187; Brown, 835; Hill, 1053; Clinch, 613; Thompson, 772; Owen, 704. The candidates were nominated by:—Dr. Samuel Frye, James Boyd, Joseph Walton, Donald D. Morrisson, Peter Sime, Colonel Hugh McKay, Wilford Fisher.

The citizens of Portage, Aroostook Co. Me., are enraged over the actions of a hunter who recently shot a pet deer of the neighborhood. During the forest fires last summer an employe of the Portage Mill Company captured a fawn which he cared for since. The fawn grew up around the door yard and became thoroughly tame. He would travel about the town calling on the neighbors, always returning to its home for the night. It was the pet of the community. Monday a hunter driving through the town saw the deer in the street and shot him. The indignation of the citizens was something fierce and it was only through the counsel of the wiser that the slayer escaped bodily harm.

Hestia was Twelve Miles Out of her Course

Yarmouth, N. S., Nov. 3—In view of the attempts which are being made to attach blame for the Steamer Hestia accident to the Marine Department, and of the irresponsible statements which are being made by various party newspapers, your correspondent deems it wise to present such information of an indisputable character as he has been able to glean after a careful consultation with several well known master mariners.

Third Officer Stewart, the only surviving navigating officer of the ship, caused to be published in St. John, a statement in which he censures the Marine Department, as to the aids to navigation, and particularly to the gas buoy on the Old Proprietor shoal where the Hestia struck, as being responsible for the disaster which resulted in the loss of thirty-four lives.

There is sound reason no doubt the truth of this assertion. Captain Adelbert McKinnon, of the steamer La Tour and one of the best navigators in these parts was near the scene of the Hestia wreck on Thursday last and found the buoy on Old Proprietor in position. It was daylight at the time, and Captain McKinnon was not able to tell whether or not it was lighted, as a matter of course. He declares; however, that the Government steamer Lansdowne came along immediately after him, cruised around it for half an hour and steamed to the westward, evidently finding the buoy not only properly moored, but also sounding properly and lighted. Capt. McKinnon is a strong doubter of the stories circulated to the effect that this buoy had been unlighted for some time.

After the consultation which your correspondent had with prominent master mariners this afternoon accompanied by a joint examination of the chart, there can be no doubt that Captain Newman was about twelve miles out of his course. The regular procedure for masters of steamers coming from Britain and bound for St. John is to make Cape Sable and then steer to the Lurcher Lightship off Yarmouth, from which they steer to a point off Northwest Ledge where the Hestia was lost.

Third Officer Stewart's statement that the ship was steering the middle course, and after sounding had found a depth of 100 fathoms cannot be true. That depth could only be found off Northwest Ledge where the Hestia would have been had she been on her proper course. But she been there she would have been 12 miles from Old Proprietor.

The theory of experienced master mariners here is that Captain Newman did not sight any of the leading navigation aids after making Cape Sable. It seems almost certain that he never sighted the Lurcher Lightship, but entered the Bay of Fundy on more or less of a venture. The heavy northeast wind and ebb tide which prevailed before the wreck carried him over towards Grand Manan and to the scene of the disaster.

Synod in Favor of Abolition Of the Bar

Temperance.—Regarding this burning question, your committee is prepared to propose the following resolutions:

That the Synod is in favor of the ultimate abolition of the bar as a place of public drinking, and that in its opinion where a license law is in force it should be a high license with a definite plan for the reduction of their number in the district. That the Synod places itself on a record as favoring the vigorous enforcement of the laws which have to do with the regulations of the liquor traffic. That in the opinion of this Synod the practice of public treating is to be condemned. The synod commends the habit of total abstinence for the sake of others as a voluntary surrender of personal liberty completely in accord with the highest form of Christian character.

With reference to the subject matter of the last section, the Rev. Mr. Wiggins of Sackville said, whilst deplorig the evils of intemperance as much as any one, said he felt that to set the laws of parliament above the law of God would not be in accordance with His will. God had provided the product of the earth for the good of man and commanded him to use them. When God wished to punish man he cursed the vine and fig tree. His confirmation and ours required him to promise that he would behave himself with temperance, soberness and chastity, and he had endeavored to carry out his promise. Therefore he felt that as God had provided the product of the vine for man's use, it could only be described as conflicting with God's law when man took upon himself to say that it was wrong to use wine. For his own part, he thought that as long as a man conducted himself in soberness and chastity and in this respect fulfilled the law of God it was all that he was called upon to do. It seemed to him that for man to forbid what God had expressly allowed, and under certain circumstances commanded, was to put man's law before God's.

Mr. G. O. D. Otty, Mr. L. H. Bliss and others followed, and repudiated any such doctrine as Mr. Wiggins wished to lay down, and whether contrary to the Law of God or not, they expressed their firm belief in the principle of the Scott Act.
