POETRY.

EVENING HYMN FOR CHILDREN.

Now we thank Thee, Heavenly Father,
For the blessings of the day;
Thou hast fed, and clothed, and blessed us,
And hast kept all harm away;
Father, hear us,
While our evening hymn we say.

Though Thou art so good and gracious,
We have very sinful been;
Naughty ways and evil tempers,
Through the day Thine eye hath seen;
Lord, forgive us,
Wash our souls and make us clean.

We are weak and helpless children,
And we have no guard but Thee;
Through the silent hours of darkness
Still our kind Protector be:
Thou hast taught us
We may safely trust in Thee.

Father! be Thou always with us,
Keeping us by day and night;
Chiefly guard our souls from evil
By Thy Holy Spirit's might;
May He make us
Pure and holy in Thy sight.

Thus may we though weak and sinful,
Peacefully lie down to rest;
For no evil can come near us
With Thy gracious presence bless'd;
Happy Children!
In our Father's love we rest.

MISCELLANY.

ENGLISH ARISTOCRATS—ROMANCING IN THE UNITED STATES—ELOPEMENT IN HIGH LIFE.

Our country appears to be entering on a new and very pleasing phaze of social life, in which it is probably destined to eclipse the glories of other countries celebrated in that line. Hitherto we were content to receive the hordes of vulgar emigrants and laborers which Ireland and Germany keep constantly pouring on our shores; then began to come shoals of artistes, dancers, singers violinists, exiles and revolutionists, from all parts of Europe; but laterly England has commenced to send us her contingency in the shape of runaway wives who have levanted from their husbands with seven foot guardsmen—fashionable young ladies, who have left their mamas in tears at Cheltenham or Brighton, and scampered off with some disciple of Esculapius—amorous ministers who have deserted their flocks, for the purpose of watching over one beautiful but erring lamb; and a fine, romantic specimens of frail humanity in every grade of fashionable life, who have been guilty of "loving not wisely but too well." This country offers such numerous advantages to these travellers, that it is now becoming quite the resort of English runaways, who instead of starting for the Continent, as was formerly the etiquette, now step on board one of Cunard's steamers and are transported to these free shores, where they have no watchful mama to restrain their humors, no jealous helpmate to prevent them from indulging in innocent amusement, no "gendermee" to demand their passports, and very few intermedling busybodies to ask them whence they come, whither they go, or what the duce they are about. Here they come where they have a boundless extent of country to gallivant over, they can dodge every futile attempt at pursuit, spout poetry and romance at the water-falls of Niagara, have a game of bob peep in the caves of Virginia, ramble as they list, from "early morn to dewey eve," over the lofty mountains or among the lonely paths of the deep forest, and enjoy each others society until they become palled with too much sweets, till the novelty, amorousness and excitement is worked off—till the purse (no matter how acquired) is nearly exhausted; and then like prodigal children they return to their fathers, their wives, or their husbands, in old England, where such things are regarded as mere peccadilloes, have their little faux pass pardoned and overlooked and are again taken into favor. This course has become quite fashionable with these high-born and high-living ladies in England who meditate an excursion with cavalier servente, while my lord is laid up in his baronial pile with an attack of gout or the infirmities of old age, and even the young misses, who would never be suspected of possessing a knowledge of such things, seem quite posted up in the infinite superiority of the transatlantic tour to the old, troublesome and dangerous route through France Italy and Germany. It is but rarely indeed that any of these escapades are noticed in the American Journals, as they don't make any fuss about such trivial matters in England, but just let the lovers have their return. However, the Advertisements sometimes develope in a sort of disguise, many romantic incidents intelligible only to the parties interested, and often beyond the comprehension of general readers. Under the head of "personal," may be found in our journal, day after day, notices which if the secrets contained in them were known, would form texts for novels and romances, enough to fill the shelves of every circulating library in the country. We clip from the Herald of the other morning one of those strange advertisements, into the mystery of which we have been able to penetrate, and for the enlightment and amusement of our readers we will state the facts so far as they have come within our knowledge. Here is the notice adverted to:

NOTICE.—A friendly interview is desired by the brother of the lady, who in company with a gentleman, left the Washington House, Philadelphia, 22nd ult.; the Western Hotel, New York, 23rd ult.; the Globe Hotel, Brooklyn, 24th ult.; the Delevan House, Albany, on the evening of the 24th ult., returning to New York by the Hendrick Hudson Steamer, on the morning of the 25th ult. If the lady alluded to will grant the desired interview, it will be of great advantage to all the parties interested. A note addressed to L. M. C., New York Post Office, will be promptly attended to.

To unravel the secret of this affair we must digress a little, and introduce our readers to a chapter on the British peerage. On reference to Burke's Peerage and Baronetage of the British Empire, we find given, under the head of "Con," the coat of arms and genealogical history of the family of Conyngham. The arms are—to use the heraldic expressions—argent, a shake fork between three mullets, sable. Crest, a unicorn's head erased, argent, armed and maned, or. Supporters, dexter a horse argent, maned, hoofed and charged on the breast with an eagle, displayed or. Sinister, a hack, proper armed, unguled and charged on the breast with a griffin's head, erased or. Motto, "Over, fork over." The present head of the family is described as—

Conyngham, Marquis, (Francis Nathaniel Conyngham,) Earl Conyngham, Earl of Mount Charles, Viscount Slane, Conyngham, in the peerage of Ireland; Baron Minster, of Minister Abbey, county Kent, in the peerage of the United Kingdom; K. P., G. C. H., and F. C. Born, 17th June, 1797. Married, 23d April, 1824, Lady Jane Paget, daughter of the Marquis of Anglesey; and his issue:—1 George Henry, Earl of Mount Charles, an officer of First Life Guards; born 3rd February, 1825. 2. Francis Nathaniel, born 24th September, 1832. 1. Jane, married the 19th May, 1849, to the Right Hon. Lord Churchill. 2. Frances Caroline Maria, married 8th June, 1847, to Gustavus William Lambart Esq., of Beau Park county Meath. 3. Elizabeth Georgiana. 4. Cecilia Augusta. This family is very ancient—William, the first of them mentioned in their history, having been Bishop of Argyll, in 1539. One of his sons was created Baronet of Nova Scotia, and another, who was in holy orders, is only remarkable for his salvanic notions, having had a family of twenty-seven children. Another, of the family fought on the side of the Prince of Orange at Boyne, and at Limerick, and afterwards fell in an encounter with Irish "rapparees." The son of the latter individual was captain in Lord Mountjoy's regiment, on the side of James the Second, but prevailed on five hundred of his men to transfer their allegiance to William. Engraved, it might have been from this circumstance that the family borrowed its motto, "Over, fork over." We do not find anything further interesting in the history of his noble family, until we come to that chapter of it which has been for the most part acted in the United States. It will be observed, by our extract from Burke, that two daughters of the present Baron are married. One of them, we cannot tell which, is the lady adverted to in the above advertisement. The cause of her elopement is that very common one—an ill assorted union. Young and surpassingly beautiful, she, in compliance with the established order of things in that aristocratic land, made a match of convenience, and wed a tilted, old, incapable man, though, it is said, she was at the time affianced to a cousin of her own, a fine looking fellow, and a captain in the Guards. A few years passed away in splendid wretchedness. The routs and balls of high life in London, frittered away a couple of seasons; but still the wound inflicted on her young heart by the god of love, remained unhealed; the fire still lingered there needing only an occasion to make it burst out into a resistless flame. Satan is for ever busy to furnish lovers with opportunities to transgress, brought about a meeting between the lady and the object of her affection; love predominated over duty, and old feelings rushed back with redoubled strength; marriage vows, and the world's condemnation were alike forgotten; the lovers were in each others arms, and they felt they were all the world to each other. Soon after, the mansion of the husband missed its brightest ornament—the beautiful but erring wife was on board of a steamer bound to this port, in company with him for whom she had sacrificed her home, rank and honor. The lady's brother set out in pursuit of the fugitives, and the advertisement shows how closely he tracked their movements for the first four or five days. Here, however, all his efforts were baulked—all trace was lost of them; and as a dernier resort, he advertises for the fair runaway to grant him an interview. We understand it is designed by the family, if she would consent to restore her to her old place in their affections—to procure a divorce for her from her antique husband, and let her marry him for whom she had made such sacrifices. It is hard to say, however, whether even on these favorable terms the will capitulate, so long as they can enjoy freedom, love and happiness travelling over this grand country, and experiencing all they had before dreamed of bliss. Perhaps all this time they are ruralizing incog in one of the suburban villages of this metropolis, where, out of the high road of travellers, they can maintain their secret inviolate, and revel in luxury and love, so long as their funds hold out; but probably they will recognize the liberality of the terms offered, return to old England, reconciled with offended friends and train up a few scions of aristocracy to imitate, in due process of time, this little episode in their own history. So mote it be! In the meautime, this is but one of the many similar incidents which take place from week to this country. Hardly a steamer crosses from Liverpool but brings one or two couple of fugitive lovers, who can easily baffle pursuit, and enjoy themselves to their heart's content, seeing the wonders of this wonderful land. Society here, too, is progressing to that desirable condition which regards such adventures as the merest vanalities, and in some respects commendable. The confraternity of infidels and socialists, whose post d'appui is the office of the New York Tribune, have done much to produce this improvement in public sentiment, and they deserve a vote of thanks from all those ladies light o' loves who have been made, or may contemplate making a tour of pleasure to this continent. We are a great people, and are making vast progress in refinement.—New York Herald.

A BRIDE'S REVENGE.—The other day as a wedding party was ascending the steps which approach one of our churches, the intended bride herself, owing to some obstruction or to an inadvertent step, missed her footing, and fell. The swain, unable, even at that joyful crisis of his existence, to conceal his vexation at this little contretemps, exclaimed pettishly, "Dear me, how very clumsy!" The lady said nothing, but she was observed to bite her lip, and a far darker and gloomier look than beseemed the court of Hymen was seen to gather on her brow. She walked deliberatly, however into the church; the ceremony commenced, and everything proceeded in orthodox fashion, until the important question was put—"Will thou have this man?" &c. Here instead of whispering, blushingly, a soft affirmative to the communion cushion the fair lady drew herself up, cast a withering glance upon her betrothed, and muttering the words, "Dear me, how very clumsy!" sailed down the aisle, and out of the church with the port of an offended goddess. It was a clear purchase, the revenge of her's. We have not heard the sequel.—Liverpool Times.

A TRICK WELL PLAYED.—Many are fond of playing tricks, as hiding a boy's cap, or a girl's bonnet at school. Such things may sometimes be done for amusement, or to confer pleasure, but never to any one's serious inconvenience.

In one of our Colleges, a professor who made himself very social and familiar with the students, was walking out with a intelligent scholar, when they saw an old man hoeing in a corn field. He was advancing with his work towards the road, by the side of which lays his shoes. As it was near sunset, the student proposed to play the old man a trick. "I will hide his shoes, and we will conceal ourselves behind the bushes, and see what he will do." "No," said the professor, "it would not be right. You have money enough; just put a dollar in each of the old man's shoes, and then we will hide in the bushes, and see what he will do."

The student agreed to the proposal, and they concealed themselves accordingly. When the labourer had finished his row of corn, he came out of the field to go home. He put on one shoe, felt something hard, took it off, and found the dollar. He looked around him, but saw no one, and looked up gratefully towards heaven. He then put on the other shoe, and found another dollar. He looked at it and looked all around him, but saw no one.—He then knelt upon the ground, and returned thanks to God for the blessing which had thus been conferred upon him. The listeners learned from the prayer, that the old man's wife and one of his children were sick, and that they were very poor; so that the two dollars were a great relief sent to them from heaven. The old man now returned with a cheerful and gratified heart. "There," said the professor, "how much better this is than to have hid the old man's shoes." The student's eyes filled with tears, and he said he would never play another trick upon any one except in kindness.

TRUE BLUE.—We (the Irish) take everything that comes from Parliament as a boon and a favour. Little guessing often how it will turn out. Our conduct in this reminds me of poor Jack Whalley's wife. You remember Jack, that was post boy at the Cumberoul Arms.—Well his wife one day chanced to find an elegant piece of white leather on the road, and she brought it home with her in great delight, to mend Jack's small clothes, which she did very neatly. Just set off the next day, little suspecting what was in store for him; but when he trotted about five miles—it was in the month of July—he began to feel mighty uneasy in the saddle—a feeling that continued to increase at every moment, till at last he said, "It was like taking a canter on a bee-hive in swarming time;" and well it might, for the piece of leather was no other, both male and female, whose names modesty has not daring mentioned." And these relics, Sir, are exposed, on certain occasions, by cardinals and bishops, for the worship and adoration of the vulgar.

KIRWAN'S LETTERS TO CHIEF JUSTICE TANEY.

LETTER XIV.

Relics.—Scala Sancta.—Sancta Sanctorum.—Tombs of Santa Croce—of St. Praxede—of Saint Peter's—in Milan—in Cologne.—Sanctioned by the Church.—Made to Order.—That they should be true, not essential.—Their effects upon the People.—These Forgers of Relics unfitted to be our moral Teachers.

MY DEAR SIR,—The spirit of Romanism is the spirit of human nature. Well considering the instincts of the fallen nature of man, it has built upon those instincts a system of superstition which towers to heaven, and which casts its dark shadow over all the earth. A regard for relics is a part of our nature. We cherish with fond affection any thing which serves as a memorial of parents, children, valued friends—of the great, the wise, the good, the heroic, who have adorned the race, and blessed the earth by their deeds. And upon this principle of human nature, in itself innocent, and within due bounds, laudable, Romanism has built up a system of fraud, and falsehood, and imposture, which should unite the race in hissing it out of the world. Permit me to ask your attention, in the present letter, to the relics of Romanism.

Near to the church of St. John Lateran, and within the same inclosure, is a little chapel which contains the celebrated Scala Sancta, or holy stair-case. It contains twenty-eight marble steps; and the priests inform us that this is the holy stair-case which Christ several times ascended and descended when he appeared before Pilate, and that it was carried by angels from Jerusalem to Rome. At certain times it is covered with persons crawling up it on their knees, with their rosaries in their hands, and kissing each step, as they ascend. I called at this place several times to see the devotees, but in vain. I went up and down the lateral steps without any to molest me, save a fleshly old monk, who sat as sentry facing the holy stairs, and who never failed to jingle a money-box in my face. On one occasion, two beggars offered to go up the stairs for me in due form, for a paul each, and to pray for me as they crawled up; but it would look like simony, and I declined the bargain. On another occasion, I ventured to place my Protestant feet on the three upper stairs, when my valet was frightened into hysterics lest the people should know it, or I should be punished for sacrilege. Resolved not to be cheated out of a sight I so long desired to see, I went there on a Friday afternoon, and the stairs covered with people, mostly beggars, mute devoutly crawling on their knees, and when the ceremony was ended, going away in the highest merriment. But not a priest was there. As I gazed upon the revolting and superstitious scene, my mind recurred to that memorable day in the world's history when Luther ascended these stairs. "While going through his meritorious works," says D'Aubigne, "he thought he heard a voice like thunder speaking from the depths of his heart, 'The just shall live by faith.' These words resounded instantaneously and powerfully within him. He started up in terror on the steps up which he had been crawling: he was horrified at himself; and, struck with shame for the degradation to which superstition had degraded him, he fled from the scene of his folly." From that hour he walked forth a free man; and thus the fraud of the holy stairs, and the revolting, degrading superstitions there practiced, were promotive of the glorious Reformation. This grand incident gave those wooden-covered stairs more interest to me than all the legends of monkery and priestcraft concerning them.

There is a vast amount of mystery and sacredness thrown around the little building which contains these holy stairs. Here are several apartments which are kept locked, and to which I sought admission in vain. At the top of the holy stairs is a room called the Sancta Sanctorum, which is held in peculiar veneration. There is a picture of the Savior, by Luke, seven palms high, and an exact picture of him, when twelve years of age! There is the pen of the seraphic doctor, brought by an angel from heaven, and with which he wrote his works! There is a feather from the wing of the archangel, which he dropped on the salutation of Mary! There is a bottle of the milk of Mary!—There is a bottle of the tears which Jesus shed at the grave of Lazarus! And there is the cord which bound the Savior to the post when scourged!—And in the church itself are the heads of Peter and Paul, which, on certain occasions, are exhibited with magnificent parade. Indeed, St. John Lateran is exceedingly rich in relics, as it ought to be, considering it is denominated "Mater et caput ecclesiarum."

The Church of Santa Croce, in Gerusalemme, is one of the great basilicas of Rome. It was built, it is said, by Helena, on the site of the residence of the brute Heliogabalus, and of his successor Severus. It derives its name from the fact, or fiction, that Helena deposited there a third part of the holy cross which she discovered on Calvary, and mixed with its foundation some holy clay from Jerusalem. This is the place where the "golden rose" of former days was consecrated; but it is now famous only for its large collection of relics. Near the chancel are two cabinets hung up for the perusal of all; one is a detail of the indulgences granted to all who there worship, and the other is a list of its sacred relics. The list I saw myself, and give it, as translated by Seymour. It is very rich, and worthy of all attention.

"Three pieces of the true cross, deposited by Constantine, and kept in a case of gold and jewels.

"The title placed over the cross, with the writing in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin.

"One of the most holy nails by which our Lord Jesus was crucified.

"Two thorns from the Crown of our Lord Jesus.

"The finger of St. Thomas, which touched the most holy side of the risen Lord Jesus Christ.

"The transverse beam of the cross of the repentant thief.

"One of the pieces of money supposed to be given for the betrayal of Christ.

"The bodies of St. Cesarius and Anastasius.

"The cord by which our Lord was bound to the cross.

"The sponge which contained the gall and wormwood."

"A large piece of the coat of Christ.

"A large piece of the veil and hair of the Virgin.

"Some of the clothing of St. John the Baptist.

"Portions of the arms of St. Peter and St. Paul.

"Some of the ashes of St. Lawrence the martyr.

"A vessel of the palm in which the head of St. Vincent was dipped.

"Some of the earth from Calvary saturated with the blood of Christ.

"A vial full of the blood of Christ.

"A vial full of the milk of Mary.

"A piece of the sepulchre of Christ.

"A piece of Mount Calvary.

"A piece of the place where Christ was martyred."

To shorten this catalogue of wonders, I must omit the list of bits of stones from the various places mentioned in the history of Christ.

"Some of the cotton in which was collected the blood of Christ.

"Some relics of eleven prophets.

"A portion of the rod of Aaron, that budded.

"A part of the head of John the Baptist.

"Some of the skin and hair of St. Catherine of Siena.

"A tooth of Saint Peter.

"A tooth of Saint Gordian."

And then follows a list of some bones of a hundred and one apostles, prophets, martyrs, widows, and virgins; and the whole closes up with "a hundred and thirty-seven cases of other relics of saints, both male and female, whose names modesty has not daring mentioned." And these relics, Sir, are exposed, on certain occasions, by cardinals and bishops, for the worship and adoration of the vulgar.
