Poetry.

[illegible]NCE OF THE MINISTERIAL WORK.

[illegible] my tongue, the glory of my frame,
[illegible] the honour of man's advocate;
[illegible] souls, of more transcendant worth.
[illegible] air or Peru's exhaustless mines,
[illegible] to my care. Important trust.
[illegible] some wretched soul (tremendous thought!)
[illegible] coloured with the Gospel's joyful sounds,
[illegible] (for ever less) through my neglect,
[illegible] infernal glooms with flaming tongue,
[illegible] keeping executions on my head,
[illegible] here scours I dream my life away?
[illegible] If some ghost, cut off from life and hope,
[illegible] fierce despairing eyes upturned to Heaven,
That wildly stare and witness horrors huge,
[illegible] roaring horrid, "Lord avenge my blood
[illegible] that unpitying wretch who saw me run,
With full career, the fire enchanting road
To those devouring flames, yet warned me not;
Or faintly warned me, and with languid tone
And cool harangue denounced eternal fire
And wrath divine." At the dread shocking thought
My spirit shudders, all my inmost soul
Trembles and shrinks. Sure, if the plaintiff tries
Of plaints reprobate can reach the ear
Of the Great Judge, they must be cries like these;
But if the moment of the happy choir,
That with eternal symphonies surround
The Heavenly Throne, can stand and thus declare,
"I owe it to his care that I am here,
Next to Almighty grace. His faithful hand,
Regardless of the frowns he might incur,
Snatched me reluctant from approaching flames,
Ready to catch and burn unquenchable,
May it (best grace reward his pious soul
With some bright mansion in this world of bliss."
Transporting thought! then blessed be the hand
That formed my elemental clay to man,
And still supports me: 'tis worth while to live
If I may live to purposes so great.
Awake my dormant zeal, for ever frame
With generous ardour for immortal souls;
And may my head, and tongue, and heart, and all,
Spend and be spent in service so divine.

JESUS DIED FOR ME.

I love to sing of that great power,
That made the earth and sea;
But better still I love the song
Of "Jesus died for me."

I love to sing of shrub and flower,
Of field, and plant, and tree;
My sweetest note for ever is,
That "Jesus died for me."

I love to hear the little birds
Attune their notes with glee;
But guileless mirth can not suggest
That "Jesus died for me."

I love to think of angels's songs,
From sin and sorrow free;
But angels cannot strike their notes
To "Jesus died for me."

I love to know the time shall come
When men shall happy be;
But I am happy now, because
My "Jesus died for me."

I love to speak of God, of heaven,—
And all its purity;—
God is my Father—heaven my home—
For "Jesus died for me."

And when I reach that happy place,
From all temptation free,
I'll tune my ever rapturous notes
With "Jesus died for me."

There shall I, at his sacred feet,
Adoring, bow the knee;
And swell the everlasting choir
With "Jesus died for me."

Miscellany.

FAITHFULNESS IN LITTLE THINGS.

BY ELIZA A. CLARKE.

"Is Mr Harris in?" inquired a plainly, but neatly-dressed boy, of twelve or thirteen, of a clerk, as he stood by the counter of a large book-shop.

The well-paid clerk regarded the boy with a supercilious look, and answered, "Mr Harris is in, but he is engaged."

The boy looked at the clerk hesitatingly, and, then said, "If he is not particularly engaged, I should like much to see him."

"If you have any business to transact, I can attend to it," replied the clerk: "Mr Harris cannot be troubled with children like you."

"What is this, Morley?" said a pleasant-looking elderly man, stepping up to the clerk; "what does the boy want?"

"He insisted on seeing you, though I told him you were engaged," returned the clerk, a little abashed by the manner of his employer.

"And what would you have with me, my lad?" inquired Mr Harris, kindly.

The boy raised his eyes, and meeting the half-scornful glance of the clerk, said timidly:—

"I wish you to look at the bill of some books which I bought here about three months since. There is a mistake in it which I wish to correct."

"Ah! my boy, I see," replied Mr Harris, "you have overpaid us, I suppose."

"No, sir," answered the boy. "On the contrary, I purchased some books which are not charged on the bill, and I have called to pay you for them."

Mr Harris folded his arms across his breast, regarded the boy earnestly for a moment, and then asked, "When did you discover this mistake?"

"Not until I had reached home," replied the lad. "When I paid for the books I was in a great hurry, fearing the boat would leave before I could reach it, and did not examine the bill."

"Why did you not return and rectify the mistake?"

"Because, sir, I live at some distance from the city, and have not been able to return until now."

"My dear boy," said Mr. Harris, "you have given me great pleasure. In a long life of mercantile business, I have never met with an instance of this kind before. You have acted nobly and deserve a recompense."

"I ask no recompense," returned the boy, proudly. "I done nothing but my duty, a simple act of justice; and that deserves no reward but itself."

"May I ask who taught you such noble principles?" inquired Mr Harris.

"My Mother," answered the boy, bursting into tears.

"Blessed is the child who has such a mother," said Mr Harris, with much emotion, "and blessed is the mother of such a child! Be faithful to her teachings, my dear boy, and you will be the staff of her declining years."

"Alas! sir," sobbed the boy, "she is dead. It was her sickness and death which prevented me from coming here before."

"What is your name?" inquired Mr Harris.

"Edward Delong."

"Have you a father?"

"No, sir, my father died when I was an infant."

"Where do you reside?"

"In the village of Linwood, about fifty miles from the city."

"Well, my boy, what were the books which were forgotten?"

"Tacitus, and a Latin Dictionary."

"Let me see the bill. Ha! signed by A. C. Morley; I will see to that. Here, Mr Morley," called Mr Harris; but that functionary was busily engaged in waiting on a customer at the opposite side of the store, bowing and smiling in the most obsequious manner.

"Edward," continued the kind-hearted Mr Harris, "I am not going to reward you for what you have done, but I wish to manifest my approbation of your conduct in such a manner as to make you remember the wise and excellent precepts of your departed mother. Select from my store any ten books you choose, which, in addition to the ten you had before, shall be a present to you; and henceforth, as now, my boy, remember and 'not despise the day of small things.' If ever you need a friend, call on me, and for your mother's sake I will assist you."

When the grateful boy left the store, through his own tears he saw the moistened eyes of his kind benefactor.

NEW DISCOVERIES IN NINEVEH.

The London Assyrian Excavation Society have just issued a most satisfactory report of the progress of their agent in Babylonia. The following extract is of the highest interest:

A most beautiful palace has been recently discovered at Nineveh, belonging to the son Esar Haddon. The sculptures are infinitely superior in variety of subject, in artistic treatment, and in skill and delicay of execution, to everything which has been before found. The palace, also, is of great extent, containing, perhaps, five hundred sculptured slabs, and the marbles are generally in a good state of preservation.

In another letter he adds:

The palace is by far the most magnificent thing yet discovered in Assyria. Each hall, room and passage is devoted to a separate subject, and where the series is complete, and the sculpture well preserved, as not unfrequently happens, it is of extraordinary interest. In fact the variety of subject, artistic grouping and treatment, high relief, richness of detail and delicacy of execution, entitle the palace to be reckoned the chef d'œuvre of Assyrian art. Some of the pavement slabs are most superb, and the animals, trees and flowers, even the human figures, are much more natural and free from conventionalities than in any of the earlier palaces. There are between two and three hundred sculptured slabs already uncovered, and not above one-half of the palace is yet explored.

Colossal bulls and lions there are none, but monstrous centaurs, hippogryphs, &c., there are as many as you please.

At one of the entrances, there is a pair of round ornamented pedestals, which certainly supported columns, but as there are no remains of such columns, they must have been formed I suppose of wood.

On one slab there is a city with a double wall, and within, a temple, faced with a row of columns supported on the back of animals. On another, there is a mound, on the top of which is a castle, and, to give more extent to the upper platform, a causeway is run out from the top of the masonary, with sharp-pointed arches stretching down the sides of the mound.

Another private letter from a gentleman residing at Mosul, speaks in the same terms of praise of these new discoveries, and adds some further particulars regarding the subjects of the sculptures. In speaking of the slab representing the palace or temple alluded to above, he says: "It represents very minutely the exterior architecture. The second story is built with pillars, which have their bases on the backs of lions and human-headed bulls, with their heads turned like these at Khorsabad." He also mentions the representation of a bridge with three pointed arches, and other particulars illustrative of the architecture of the period.

One of the best executed slabs represents a lion hunt; "In this scene," he says, "the king is the principal huntsman, and is in the act of striking a lance into a lion springing upon his chariot, whilst seven others, already pierced by many arrows, some of which are dead, and others dying, are most beautifully and naturally portrayed upon the slabs. On another they have represented a park, with an open gate, through which is seen the king hunting lions, executed on a very minute scale, as if they intended it to appear far in the distance."

He concludes by saying "that the art displayed in the treatment of both men and animals in these bas-reliefs surpasses everything discovered in the ruins of Assyria."

The committe take this opportunity of calling the attention of the subscribers to the progress recently made in the deciphering of the inscriptions, which comprise the identification of all the Assyrian kings mentioned in the Bible—of many of those whose names occur in profane history—extending the chronology of Assyria to a period of about two thousand years before Christ. An almost perfect series of the names of the kings of Assyria has also been discovered, and numerous illustrations of the sacred Scriptures, of the highest interest.

BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATION.

Rev Mr. Willets, of Philadelphia, in illustrating the blessedness of cultivating a liberal spirit, uses this figure:

See," he says, "that little fountain yonder—away, yonder in the distant mountain, shining like a thread of silver through the thick copse, and sparkling like a diamond in its healthful activity. It is hurrying on with tinkling feet to bear its tribute to the river. See, it passes a stagnant pool, and the pool hails it; 'Whither away master streamlet?' 'I am going to the river to bear this one of water God has given me.' 'Ah, you are very foolish for that—you'll need it before the summer's over. It has been a backward spring, and we shall have a hot summer to pay for it—you will dry up then.' 'Well,' said the streamlet, 'if I am to die so soon, I had better work while the day lasts.' If I am likely to lose this treasure from the heat, I had better do good with it while I have it.' So on it went, blessing and rejoicing in its course. The pool smiled complacently at its own superior foresight, and husbanded all its resources, letting not a drop steal away. Soon the mid-summer heat came down, and it fell upon the little stream. But the trees crowded to its brink, and threw out their sheltering branches over it in the day of adversity, for it brought refreshment and life to them, and the sun peeped through the branches and smiled complacently upon its dimpled face, and seemed to say,—'It's not in my heart to harm you,'—and the birds sipped its silver tide, and sung its praises; the flowers breathed their perfume upon its bosom; the beast of the field loved to linger near its banks; the husbandman's eye always sparkled with joy, as he looked upon the line of verdant beauty that marked its course through his fields and meadows; and so on it went, blessing and blessed of all!

"And where was the prudent pool? Alas! in its inglorious inactivity, it grew sickly and pestilential.—The beasts of the field put their lips to it, but turned away without drinking; the breeze stopped and kissed it by mistake, but shrunk chilled away. It caught the malaria in the contact, and carried the ague through the region, and the inhabitants caught it and had to move away; and at last, the very frogs cast their venom upon the pool and deserted it, and heaven, in mercy to man, smote it with a hotter breath and dried it up!

"But did not the little stream exhaust itself? Oh, no! God saw to that; it emptied its full cup into the river, and the river bore it on to the sea, and the sea welcomed it, and the sun smiled upon the sea, and the sea sent up its incense to greet the sun, and the clouds caught in their capacious bosoms the incense from the sea, and the winds, like waiting steeds, caught the chariots of the clouds and bore them away—away to the mountain that gave the little fountain birth, and there they tipped the brimming cup, and poured the grateful baptism down; and so God saw to it, that the little fountain, though it gave so fully and so freely, never ran dry. And if God so bless the fountain, will he not bless you, my friends, if, 'as ye have freely received, ye also freely give?' Be assured he will."

IGNORANT VIEWS OF HEAVEN.

One of the most remarkable illustrations of this is to be found in a recent occurrence. A dissolute man of large fortune made an attempt upon the life of an actress, and immediately destroyed his own life. In a letter by him before the perpetration of the foul deeds, he signifies his deliberate intention of thus committing a double murder, that he and his intended victim might go to heaven together! and remarks that he was in a state of ecstatic joy at the prospect! Was ever a man more deluded by the devil! A debauchee, a frequenter of theatres, a murderer, a suicide, and yet anticipating the rewards of heaven! What could have been his idea of heaven? Was it a Mahometan paradise? It could not have been the heaven of the Bible, a book which he probably never opened. The truth is, he had sold himself to the devil, who had so utterly blinded him as to exclude from his soul all true light and hope. Dreadful the transition of a soul so wholly polluted, and inexpressible the disappointment which crushed him as the realities of eternity surrounded him. Passing by this case, it is deserving of remark, that in this Christian land, where true knowledge is accessible tens of thousands are entertaining hopes for the future world just as fallacious. They have not God in all their thoughts; they repel the only method of salvation; they live in their lusts, and anticipate heaven as the result of all! Being willingly deluded, their chagrin will be the more tormenting when they wake up to shame and everlasting contempt. Heaven is a place of holiness; it presupposes a state of holiness in those for whom it is intended: a life of faith and self-denial is a necessary precedent for its attainment; and as sure as God lives, the impenitent sinner cannot enter within its precincts.

"WE SEE BUT IN PART."—A traveller as he passed through a large and thick wood, saw a part of a huge oak, which appeared misshapen, and also seemed to spoil the scenery.

"If," said he, "I was the owner of this forest, I would cut down that tree."

But when he had ascended the hill, and taken a full view of the forest, this same tree appeared the most beautiful of the whole landscape.

"How erroneously," said he, "I have judged while I saw only a part."

"This plain tale," says Dr. Olin, "illustrates the plans of God. We now see but in part. The full view, the harmony and proportion of things, are all necessary to clear up our judgment."

B.—MKIM & CLEAR, Manufacturers of Monuments, Tombstables, Grave Stones, Chimney Pieces, and Centre Tables.—Every description of Ornamental Work executed with neatness at their establishment, Germain-street, 3d house north of Country Market. Monuments, Head Stones, &c. of the best material, in the most improved styles, and fully as cheap and durable as any which can possibly be obtained on this continent.

After a long experience in England and Scotland, M'Kim & Clear be satisfied they can execute work, equal in every, and superior in many, respects to any thing in their line manufactured in the city; and, while they are prepared to allow all honest competitors "a clear stage and no favor," they feel convinced they can produce at all times and on all occasions, workmanship in every respect superior to that of those Americans who advertise their wages at "twenty five per cent less than any show in the the city"!! and who, uninstructed, uneducated in their art, can only attract attention by proselyting the rather unenviable and unprofitable business of denouncing (as "keepers of the petty shops that have springing up,") those who have carefully given their undivided attention to the study of their business, and who fairly and honorably enter the arena of public competition, determined to stand or fall by the superior excellence of their workmanship as judged by a discerning public.

For sale—a large quantity of Soap Stone, a superior article for lining stoves.

☞A "Diploma" and Prize were awarded to R. A. M'Kim, for excellence in carving, at the last New Brunswick Provincial Exhibition. St. John, Jan. 6, 1854
