(From the "New York Tribune.")

The scenes are laid alternately in New York, on the coast of Africa and Ægian Sea. We have laughed almost to side splitting at the eccentricities of Old Long Ketch, the Lounge Chief; and we have alternately rejoiced and wept over the history of Zuleika, the Greek maid and mutton.

We fancy, too, that there is some satire hidden beneath the character of Mordaunt, but we do not wish to forestall the author's narrative—there are some exceedingly beautiful touches of pathos in various portions of the volume. It must have a large sale. For sale by
