Poetry.

THE CARELESS WORD.

'Twas but a word, a careless word;
As thistle-down it seemed as light;
It paused a moment on the air,
Then onward winged its flight.

Another lip caught up the word
And breathed it with a haughty sneer;
It gathered weight and on it sped—
That careless word, in its career.

Then rumor caught the flying word,
And busy gossip gave it weight,
Until that little word became
A vehicle of angry hate.

And then that word was winged with fire,
Its mission was a thing of pain,
For soon it fell like lava drops
Upon a wildly tortured brain.

And then another page of life
With burning, scalding tears were blurred;
A load of care was heavier made,
Its added weight, that careless word.

That careless word, O how it scorched
A fainting, bleeding, quivering heart!
'Twas like a hungry fire that searched
Through every tender, vital part.

How wildly throbbed that aching heart!
Deep agony its fountain stirred;
It calmed, but bitter ashes mark
The pathway of that careless word.

Miscellaneous.

THE TWO PICTURES.

BY STUART MILLER.

Edward Glen was going home one night in the dusk. Well, I'm not quite sure if he was going straight home, for there happened to be a half way house, at a certain corner, which somehow he could never get past, when he had a sixpence in his pocket. He was on the way home, however, when he met an old fellow-apprentice whom he hadn't seen for an age.

'Why, where on earth have you been all this while, Glen?' exclaimed Frank Dysart. 'We've been on the hunt after you ever since we came to town.'

'I work at Mossman's Foundry,' said Edward confusedly.

'All right,' returned Frank, 'but you must take a cup of tea with us to-night, and we will return the compliment one of these days.'

'I promised that I would be early home to-night,' began Edward, but his old friend caught him by the arm, and wheeled him round with an air of resolution.

'Our crib is not a hundred miles off, and your wife won't grudge an old comrade half an hour. Any way, Edward, you must look in and see the old woman and the children,' and it was no use begging off.

'I know you've been one of the lucky ones, Frank,' said Edward Glen, as they walked along.

'Luck's all nonsense, Glen,' said Frank; 'my belief is, that every man has his fortune in his own hands, with God's blessing.'

'Some can't get on though, do as they like,' sighed Edward.

'Then, depend upon it, there's a screw loose somewhere, if the machinery won't work,' laughed Frank; 'but this is our cabin door.'

Edward Glen stared, as well he might, when Frank pointed to a hadsome cottage, with a pretty flower-garden in front, and a goodly piece of well cultivated ground behind.

Two rosy, smart children came running through the primroses and violets to welcome them.

'You have had a windfall, Frank,' said Edward in amazement.

'Yes, yon cherry tree in the farthest corner was a windfall,' answered Frank, with great gravity; 'but, thank goodness, there was no worse damage done that fearful night.'

That was not exactly what Edward Glen meant, but he smiled, and followed Frank in silence through the perfumed path to the jessamine porch.

'One, two, three, four, five—half-a-dozen to keep in grub. Frank must have found a purse,' thought Edward.

'Nice situation this, isn't it Glen?' said Frank, pausing to watch the setting sun's golden glory.

'Rent rents must be high in this quarter,' said Edward.

Frank gave a short laugh, 'Well, most of us up here are our own landlords.'

No, no, Frank had got money left him, lucky fellow.

'I wish somebody would leave me a legacy, Frank.'

'Bah! I wouldn't be any one's beggar as long as I could make my own way,' said Frank, proudly. 'We are obliged to nobody for what we have; and half the pleasure we enjoy is from our glorious independence.'

'What are you talking about?' asked a smiling little woman, laying her hand affectionately on Frank's shoulder.

'Ah, I was just saying, wife—but don't you see an old friend, Missis?'

Esther Dysart was dressed like a lady. What was the secret of all this prosperity. A glance inside discovered a comfortably furnished house, and abundance of everything. The tea was sumptuously served with ham, and fresh-laid eggs, and newly-churned butter, and cream, and hot cakes and jellies. 'Upon my word,' thought Edward, 'Frank's got a rise, and no mistake.'

After tea, the boys brought their prizes, to show father's friend. Three rough, tearing lads, that weren't kept on nothing; smart chaps, though, and far ahead with their education for their size.

'Who helped Frank?' that was what Edward wanted to know.

'My wife helps me,' laughed Frank, 'she spends the money; that's her department.'

'But you've got a tremendous rise since you came to town,' said Edward.

'Well, I have, Glen, candidly answered Frank; 'I am a foreman, now.'

'You!' instinctively exclaimed Edward Glen.

'By sheer determination, and perseverance,' continued Frank, with a smile. 'You know I wasn't a bright particular star at the outset, Glen.'

Edward Glen knew well.

'But a growing family put me to my mettle, and so with God's help, I got along.

'But you say this house is your own; and, your life's insured.'

'Oh, the cottage is not quite paid up yet,' said Frank, 'but it's on the way for it, and we are clear with everything else,' he added, gaily catching up his youngest baby, and whirling him over his head.

'I wish you would tell me your secret, Dysart,' said Edward Glen, as Frank walked to the garden gate with him.

'We have no bottles in our house,' said Frank, 'and I don't turn in at the corner, on my way home, Glen.'

Edward reddened.

'You've always kept your teetotal principles.'

'Yes, that's the secret of our prosperity,' said Frank. 'If I had yielded to drink with my dull head I would have stuck at the foot of the ladder; and what's saved off the beer goes into good investment.'

'What a downright idiot I have been,' muttered Edward Glen, as he wended his way homewards. 'That fellow hadn't half the chance I had when we began together, and he is a lord compared to what I am to-day—curse drink. If it hadn't been for it I might have been better off than the Dysarts, poor weak fool!'

But there's the brilliant lamp that has so often guided his unsteady steps into the 'Golden Fleece,' flinging him a friendly gleam; he scowls at it as if it were a snare to fleece him. The smiling landlady stands at the door; he passes without a word, and never halts till he comes to his own door, and then he half recoils with a feeling of disgust, the contrast in his own home is so great.

Bare floors, black fireside, crying children—crying with hunger and cold, poor things, and a pale weary wife, hanging over a dirty wash-tub, by the light of a cracked lantern. How could any man be expected to come home with pleasure to a miserable scene like this? It was quite different with Frank Dysart. Why, his home was like a palace! Of course he wasn't to blame, it was his wife; and full of indignation he went in and abused poor Sarah for not being a better housewife, and making his home attractive. He was perfectly sober, but Sarah seemed to doubt it. She looked at him pitifully, but made no answer. And in this she showed her wisdom. It is said speech is silver, but silence is gold sometimes.

Edward Glen was not a bad-tempered man; a little hot when he was raised, perhaps, but his anger blew off in no time when he was sober. But he was annoyed with himself to-night, and when that is the case conscience is not so easily pacified. He stormed longer than usual, but when he could make nothing more of it, he sat down silkily at his cheerless hearth.

'What are you squalling for?' he asked, as he roughly shook a thin white-faced little object shivering on the floor.

'I'm so, so hungry,' sobbed the little one.

'Can't you give them some supper,' said Glen, addressing his wife.

'We have no bread in the house, to-night, Edward, said Sarah, meekly, 'but I will have money to-morrow, when the linens are sent home, dear.'

'And have you no coals either, Sarah,' he asked.

'There is one piece left, but we must be sparing.'

'It's a cold night though,' said Edward; 'let's have a fire for once, woman, and there's a shilling to get a loaf and butter.'

'Oh, mother let me go for the loaf,' cried little Tilly, clapping her hands. 'I shan't lose the money; oh do, I'm starving, and so are Johnny and you, mother.'

'There then, run as fast as you can, Tilly,' said her father, wrapping the shilling in a piece of paper, 'and get a cake for yourself, or anything you like, child; here's another sixpence.' He hid his face behind Johnny's curly head, for there were tears in his eyes.

Wondering much at the change that had come over Edward, Sarah broke the last lump of coal in the house and made a good fire, and when she had tidied up the hearth, and set away the tubs, and smartened herself up a bit, she took courage to ask him if he had got his wages advanced?

'Not yet; but I expect something of that sort, if I keep in the mind I'm in just now,' he answered.

'But if I had known you were coming home so soon to-night, I would have been in better order,' said Sarah.

'You can't make this hovel look much better,' replied Edward, with a dash of bitterness.

'Perhaps we shall see better times yet,' said Sarah, hardly knowing what to say.

'Well, I'd blow out my brains to-night, if I didn't hope so,' said her husband.

Poor Sarah feared he had gone out of his mind he looked so wild and strange; but next morning he was more composed, and went out to his work quietly. In the evening he came home straight from the foundry.

'He is out of money,' thought Sarah; 'when pay-day comes he won't pass the Golden Fleece.'

But fancy her surprise when instead of staggering in with a bare shilling or two close on midnight, he came in smiling before it was dark, and flung his unbroken wages into her lap.

'There, Sarah, and before long, if God gives me strength, I will have twice that sum to give you on pay-day.'

Poor thing, she burst into tears, and fell sobbing on his neck.

'I've been a downright idiot and a brute to you, Sarah, for all your goodness,' said Edward, with a husky voice. 'I didn't deserve such a wife.'

'Oh, don't say that, dear Edward,' sobbed Sarah. 'You were always kind but for drink.'

'Well, you will forgive me, lass, I see,' interrupted Edward, kissing her soft cheek, 'and we will begin life again on Frank Dysart's principle. No bottles in the house, and a clear head always to make progress upwards.'

'Oh, thank God, thank God,' murmured Sarah.

'I do, with all my heart, for leading me to a noble example to open my blind eyes,' said her husband.

After tea, they went out together to make some purchases, and next day the neighbors were surprised to see Edward Glen going with his wife to church; but had they looked in at dinner, and seen the blazing fire and the well-set table, they would have got a surprise. A whole joint of mutton at the head and roasted potatoes, and a jolly plum-pudding, because it was Sunday.

Said little Johnny to Tilly, in a whisper, as he finished his pudding, 'I think we must have died and gone to heaven, if it's to be always like this.'

WORKING CHRISTIANS.—Learn to be working Christians. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." It is very striking to see the usefulness of many Christians. Are there none of you who know what it is to be selfish in your Christianity? You have seen a selfish child go into a selfish place to enjoy some delicious morsel undisturbed by his companions. So it is with some Christians. They feed upon Christ and forgiveness; but it is alone, and all for themselves. Are there not some of you who can enjoy being a Christian, while your dearest friend is not, and yet you will not speak to him? See here you have got work to do. When Christ found you, he said: "Go work in my vineyard!" What were you hired for, if it was not to spread salvation? What blessed for? Oh, my Christian friends, how little you live as though you were the servants of Christ! How much idle time and idle talk you have! This is not like a good servant. How many things you have to do for yourself; how few for Christ and his people! This is not like a servant.—M'Cheyne.

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY, 92 Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance buildings, Liverpool.
Chairman of the London Board.—SAMUEL BAKER, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—CHARLES TURNER, Esq.
The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.
At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following highly satisfactory results were shown:—
FIRE DEPARTMENT.
The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.
The Premiums for the year 1855 being.....£130,060
While the Premiums for the year 1858 are.... 196,148
Showing an actual increase of..... 66,088 or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.
The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than maintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the moiety of its advance.
LIFE DEPARTMENT.
The amount of new Life Premiums received this year is by far the largest received in any similar period since the commencement of the business, and must far exceed the average of amount received by the most successful offices in the kingdom. The number of policies issued in the year was 852, the sum assured £857,752 6s. 8d., and the premium £12,354 8s. 4d. These figures show a very rapid extension of business during the last ten years. Thus:—

Years.	No. of Policies.	Sums Assured.	New Premiums.
1848 ..	98	£48,764 17 0	£1,330 9 1
1850 ..	190	95,500 9 11	2,937 4 7
1852 ..	422	181,506 10 6	5,523 5 10
1854 ..	408	161,848 13 4	4,824 16 9
1856 ..	793	297,560 16 8	8,850 3 11
1858 ..	852	857,752 6 8	12,354 8 4

The remarkable increase in the business of the last four years is mainly consequent upon the large bonus declared in 1856, which amounted to no less than £3 per cent. per annum on the sums assured, and averaged 30 per cent. upon the premiums paid.

CAUTION! CAUTION! CAUTION!
THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.
It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin, Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleansing Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.
If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and hearty washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improves them—by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flannels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal.
