Poetry.

[FOR THE CHRONICLE.]

Let true defenders of the Faith appear,
In all their armour, as the foe is near,
Assumption and soliloquy of that ancient mystic power, that
"Brought Death into the world and all our woe."

I'm ancient evil—now called inbred sin—
Nor can my pedigree be fairly told;
'Tis so sublime—obscurely wrapt within,
None but God, my origin can unfold.

Before old time began, as records show,
I ventured boldly midst the Hosts above,
I soon enjoy'd the high Archangel's so,
He fell from light, and life, and bliss and love.

Could sin then enter in the blest abode?
My gallant spirit did—I dare to boast!
Yes, I seduc'd the mighty chief of God,
Who drew away one-third the heavenly host!

"Aspiring to be Gods the angels fell,"
And were all hurl'd at length from highest heav'n
But tho' cast out with them and doom'd to hell,
To me, at last, a place in man was given.

When man was made—pure, perfect and upright,
And lived in perfect peace and joy and love,
Thro' my grand agent Lucifer—my might
Successfully in Eve and Adam strove,

With subtle art, I scann'd the human mind,
And proved it pliant, gentle kind and soft,
To rise in knowledge, naturally inclined,
An aspiring tendency to mount aloft.

The high-blown thought—to rise—to soar above,
And reign a Goddess, ever man below,
Charm'd and beguil'd fair Eve, to taste, and love
The sweet inspiring savory fruit of woe.

On second thought—inspir'd with knowledge new
Of evil's operation on the soul,
She feared some danger in the route in view,
Which might be stay'd thro Adam's wise control.

Reluctantly—with half averted eye—
Still loath—and half inclin'd to risk defeat,
Perhaps to reign supreme, perchance to die,
That was the rub, she gave, and Adam ate.

That day, on earth my empire took its rise,
That is sustain'd by all the human race,
Deep in the heart my subtle power lies,
The infection runs o'on thro' the man of grace.

In human nature, such congenial fire,
I artfully infuse, and all combine,
That some, sometimes mistake, and turn their lyre
To sound self-fame, instead of love divine.

To make some err, who seem to truly feel,
Some vital order from celestial fire,
I watch the moment, touch their pliant zeal,
And flash the thought, well done, my reverend Sire.

Snug in the breast of some cold orthodox,
Whose faith's all on the etiquette of man,
I dash all else, (thro' might,) as heterodox,
And quench the opposing spirit if I can.

When some weak Christians feel such perfect love
That seems at once an overflowing flood,
Faith, in self-perfection, then, I try to move,
To work salvation free of Jesus' blood.

I work in some, to assume the specious guise
Of some pure Seraph of eternal day,
When void of power divine, in vain they rise,
And 'tis in form, they try to preach or pray.

Some vainly boast, mid known habitual sin
So strong in faith, election so secure,
Like Mab, for pleasure, dart thro' thick and thin,
To do what they will salvation always cure.

I still, thro' mediums, blow up bloody war,
With whom, no matter, Christians Russ or Turk,
A foe to all, I proudly mount the car,
Or stoop to eat all Bacchus' sons at work.

I've spread delusion thro' the Russian court,
Mov'd serfs and priests to rule the Russian bear,
To sacrifice a host, is gallant sport,
To gain and rule the world, by bloody war.

The Czar's defeats, so panic-struck his brain,
He kiss'd, adored the image of his saint,
His plaintiff prayer for victory was in vain.
Nor could the relic sooth his brain-complaint.

Now, oft I'm foiled by intellectual man,
O'er awed—recede before some mystic sign,
Nor all the powers of sin and Satan, can
A moment stand before true power divine.

Long I've blown, like Vulcan at the forge,
In human hearts, making my spirit flame,
And all its direful, baneful fires disgorge,
Like raging Mina, on the Christian name.

I've long convuls'd and torn and wreck'd mankind
And made division, strife, contention rise,
Caused discord, party-spirit in the mind,
And keep opposed, e'en saints in sable guise.

Were it not for men constrained by love divine,
The Priests of God, as one, in faith and love,
In peace and love would all the world combine,
And ope one "door" for all to pass above.

Devils believe and tremble—well, I know,
A fearful looking for of judgment, more severe,
Like living worms, upon their vitals gnaw,
And woes on woes, like fiery billows roar.

God rules, indeed, supremely over all,
And, at will, overrules "the Powers that be,"
Nor all my work thus, under stern control,
Can e'er impair, the least divine decree.

'Tis true indeed, millennium soon will come,
And bow, "to Jesus, every knee shall bow,"
And I must go, nor rightly know my doom,
Evil, be thou my good, I've filled the world with woe.

Yes, come it must, my reign on earth will cease,
A firm decree proclaims my exile near,
The saints glad day is rolling on, when peace,
And faith, and love, shall crown the blissful year.

The sanctuary, then illumined round,
With the resplendent glory of the Lord,
Will with real joy and perfect praise resound,
And every Christian join with sweet accord.

Man then will cease, Bellona leave her car,
No martial pomp, no din of wars resound,
No hostile hosts shall move terrific war,
All will be peace and harmony profound.

On that glad morn all heaven and earth shall ring,
And the high theme, shall ev'ry tongue employ
The morning stars shall then together sing,
And all the sons of God shall shout for joy.

All crying "holy, holy, holy Lord,
God Almighty"—Saviour—King of men,
By saints and angels, ever be adored,
Hosanna—hallelujah—shout Amen.

A Tough Witness.—Prosecuting Attorney—"Mr. Parks state if you please, whether you have ever known the defendant to follow any profession."

"He's been a professor ever since I've known him."

"Professor of what?"

"Of religion."

"You don't understand me, Mr. Parks. What does he do?"

"Generally what he likes."

"Tell the jury, Mr. Parks, what the defendant calls—"

"Gentlemen of the jury, the defendant follows the crowd when they go in to drink."

"Mr. Parks, this kind of prevarication will not do here. Now state how this defendant supports himself."

"I saw him last night support himself against a lamp post."

"May it please your honor, this witness has shown a disposition to trifle with the Court."

Judge—"Mr. Parks, state if you know any thing about it, what the defendant's occupation is."

"Occupation did you say?"

Counsel—"Yes, what is his occupation?"

"If I did mistaken, he occupies a garret somewhere in town."

"That's all Mr. Parks."

Cross-examined—"Mr. Parks, I understand you to say that the defendant was a professor of religion. Does his practice correspond with his professions? Do you hear of any correspondence or letter between them?"

"You can take your seat Mr. Parks."
