Poetry.

TO-DAY.

BY WILLIAM H. BURLEIGH.

The Past hath done its work! How well,
How ill, it matters not to say;
For lo! upon our ears doth swell
The summons of To-Day.

A king, of kings the kingliest!
No prouder ever graced a throne;
His realm the Earth from East to West,
From North to Southern zone.

His are the potencies sublime
That bend the Nations to his sway;
And every land and every clime
Alike his power obey.

The Ages that have gone before—
The awful Past now vague and dim—
Left, lapsing from Time's crumbling shore,
Their good and ill to him.

With these, for glory or for shame,
As this or that his work shall crown,
He builds the temple of his fame,
His record of renown.

His subjects we—to aid, if true—
If false, to mar, the grand design
That bide the Old Earth bloom anew,
Filled with a life divine.

He summons us to nobler tasks
That ever in the Past were wrought;
And, for his larger purpose, asks
A nobler style of thought—

Brave wills to dare, strong arms to do
The work that will not brook delay;
Wise heads, warm hearts, to duty true
And loyal to To-Day.

No dim, vague dreams of faded flowers,
Whose fragrance never comes again—
No lingering with the buried Hours,
Infirm of heart and brain,

Will he accept. Our King demands
Unswerving fealty to his Throne;
The loyalty of heart and hands,
A service all his own.

The selfish ease we must resign
That shrinks from battling old Abuse,
And learn that labor is divine,
Divine the Life of Use.

His call is heard in every sigh
That heaves the sorrow-laden breast;
In every wild, despairing cry
Power wrings from the oppress'd—

In every ancient Wrong that claims
From age authority to be—
In cruel fears, and haunting shames,
And voiceless misery—

In broken hearts, in wasted lives,
In all the toil and moil and din
From which the spirit vainly strives
Some notes of peace to win.

Fold not your arms in listless mood,
Oh Brothers!—for he speaks to you!
Need hath he of the Wise and Good—
Need of the Brave and True.

There's room for all and work for all—
The urgent need rebukes delay;
And lo! the Nations hear the call—
The summons of To-Day!

Miscellaneous.

MADGE; OR THE BROKEN WINE-CUP.

(Concluded.)

New Year's Day came round in due time, with its gifts and greetings, and found Madge still at Mr. Howard's, the patient nurse-girl, the willing waiting-maid, swift to run, slow to speak, quick to appreciate kindness, winning her way to all hearts, from the stately grand-dame, in her rustling brocade, to bright-haired Bertie, nestling to sleep in her arms, yet ever keeping locked in her own bosom the story of her grief, which her occasional visits home made ever present.

She was by this time accustomed to plenty and splendor. Her face had forgotten its pinched look, and her hands had lost their old trick of clutching at the tattered shawl. And to-day, of all days, surrounded by joyousness and good cheer, one would have said she might be happy. But to-day, of all days, her thoughts were far away down Twenty-Ninth street, and her heart carried its old burden. So, when Bertie was snug in his crib, and the family, with perhaps a lingering guest, had gathered around the fireside, she threw her mantle over her head, and rushed out in the starlight.

Then she thought how it would seem once more to wander around the street, hungry and cold, and not daring to go home. Then, gliding around in front of the great mansion, she nodded at it, and laughed to think how it seemed to invite her, with a thousand pleasant glances, to its friendly shelter. Then she stepped upon the verandah, and as the damask curtain was turned aside, she looked in upon the happy group. The noble gentleman and lady who had given her a home—the aged grandmother, with the courtly manners and stately dress of fifty years ago—Master Clarence, sometimes so teasing, sometimes so grand, with his gentlemanly airs—and young Master Frank, always her friend and champion.

There were rich curtains and carpets, and handsome furniture, costly pictures, and gleaming chandeliers; everything that goes to make up a home of taste and elegance; and Madge loved beauty as naturally as bees love sunshine. But one thing marred the scene. Gazing down through the gorgeous vista, she saw, at the further end, a shining sideboard, loaded with wine-glasses and decanters.

Yes; the destroyer of her home was there! not coarse, and vulgar, and bloated, to be sure, but far more dangerous! He wore a deceitful smile—a bewildering grace. He was a merry god, garland with flowers, and leading Pleasure by the hand.

On the wine-cup she could never gaze without a shudder; but just now she did gaze, till all that bright scene faded away from before her sight, and she beheld in its stead, a wretched room, with scanty, broken furniture, a few dying embers on the hearth, a few dry crusts the only food, a handful of rags the only covering, the mother and little ones huddled sadly together, awaiting some one with fear which amounted, in the younger ones, to terror. Then she strained every nerve to listen for the dreaded footstep, borne entirely away by her imagination, till, suddenly becoming conscious that she was observed, with a low cry, she darted swiftly away.

"Did you see Madge at the window? how wild she looked!" exclaimed Frank. "What could have been the matter?"

"Matter? humph!" said Clarence, willing enough to tease his younger brother. "Perhaps she was waiting for an invitation to take a seat in the parlour—the impertinent little beggar!"

"She is not an impertinent beggar—say that again, at your peril, Master Clarence!" replied Frank, warmly. "She would grace any parlor in the land; and I think it a shame she should be excluded from the society she would adorn, just because she is poor."

"O, our little nurse-girl is a lady, is she?" replied Clarence, with a provoking drawl; "pray, ask her if she will condescend to permit you the honor of pledging her in a glass of wine. Come, I dare you to show your gallantry!"

"I'll do it," said Frank; "and you shall see how gracefully she will respond. There she comes now;" and springing quickly up, he intercepted her as she was passing through the back parlor.

"Stop, Madge!" he cried, hastily filling two dainty glasses from the sideboard, and holding them aloft; "this is New Year's Day; you know, and mamma's visitors have been bestowing all manner of good wishes on her; allow me the honour—will you take a glass of wine with me?"

Madge stood like a statue. The wine danced and sparkled before her eyes, every drop a serpent!

"Take it—taste it," whispered Frank, "just because of Clarence—because he—"

"Must I touch it? Do you want me to drink it?" asked Madge, growing paler every moment.

"Yes," said Frank, hastily; "take it, if you only touch your lips to it, or he will say you are no lady."

"O, yes, of course she is," said Clarence tauntingly.

"Well, if I must—if you want me to so much," crid Madge, with a sudden flush, "I'll take it, to oblige you, but I'll never drink it—never. This is what I'll do with it;" and she hurled it violently against the marble mantel.

The glass was shivered to atoms; the wine mingled with the rosy hues of the carpet.

Clarence frowned; Frank stood perfectly aghast.

"What is the meaning of this disturbance?" asked Mr. Howard, in an angry tone; "what do I see? Whose work this?"

Clarence pointed toward Madge, while Frank exclaimed bitterly:

"How could you?"

"O, how could I help it?" cried Madge, wringing her hands wildly; "how could I help it? There's death in it! there's woe in it! there's poverty and starvation, and hunger and cold! blows and curses, and broken hearts, and a thousand serpents gnawing the guilty soul!"

"The girl's insane," said Mr. Howard to his wife, for by this time nearly the whole family were gathered around.

"Indeed, I am not, sir," continued Madge, nothing daunted; "it was a reckless thing to throw the glass; but O, sir, if you knew what I know—if you could see what I have seen! Your children have a beautiful home—everything to make them happy. Can you imagine what it would be for them to live without any of these lovely things—books, pictures, toys—without even the plainest necessaries of life—to see them wander barefoot and hungry through the streets, and then back to their broken hearted mother, and she weeping because she knew not where the morning meal was to come from? And suppose they dreaded to hear your footsteps, and knew by sad experience that they had reason to dread it. O, forgive me, sir; I have such a father! I wish he was like you! It was the wine-cup that made him what he is, and that made our home what it is; and sooner than touch or taste the poison, ten thousand times I'd rather wander out again from this blessed home you have given me, into the hunger and cold and darkness."

Madge sobbed convulsively, Frank cried as heartily, and Mrs. Howard was in tears.

"Poor child," said she, tenderly. "I thought she had a history!"

But now the old lady, the grandmother, in her rich brocade, and with her silvery hair and keen black eyes, having hitched her arm chair to the middle door, began to take the child's part, as a grandmother should.

"She is right! the girl is right!" she exclaimed, with authority, striking her gold-headed cane forcibly upon the floor. "She did well to break the glass and spill the wine, and rouse us from our deadly stupor; she did well to lash us with her little vixenish tongue, for our selfish indifference and careless ease, when thousands are going the downward road to ruin, perhaps because of this very temptation placed before them in just such homes as this. 'Who hath woe? who hath contention?' she continued, as if talking to herself; "'who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? They that tarry long at the wine. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red. At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.'"

Then, in a broken voice, she cried,

"O, Mortimer, you had a brother once—do you know where he is? have you seen him for years? is he among the living or the dead? One day, when the fumes of wine had mounted to his brain, he quarrelled with you, and—God forgive him—with his mother; have we ever seen him since? It was wine that destroyed him. I have warned you before, and I warn you now again, of this pernicious fashion. Banish it for your own children's sake." And the poor old lady swayed to and fro, moaning, "O, my boy! O, my lost boy!"

Mr. Howard, who had been painfully abstracted, now roused himself.

"Clarence, Frank, all of you retire. I will speak with Madge in the morning."

So they stole quietly out, one by one, and Mr. Howard gave his arm to his aged mother, and conducted her to her room, and ere long silence brooded over the household.

True to his promise, the gentleman had a long conversation with Madge next morning, not to reprove, but to soothe and comfort her. Then he went to her miserable home, and found—whom do you suppose?—his long-lost, degraded brother.

Under a disguised name, yearning for home and kindred, he had come back to the old place; but, after all, his pride would not allow him to seek a reconciliation with his friends; and striving to drown his wretchedness, he had of late drank so deeply that reason was nearly dethroned, else he would have been aware, perhaps, that Madge, strangely enough, had found a home under her uncle's roof.

But was he saved? Ah! it was a struggle. Nothing less strong than a mother's love and the power of God could have done it. He could never recall the misspent years, nor the lost health, nor the cruel deeds, but he was saved—so as by fire!

And now his family dwell in a pretty cottage, and Madge is ripening into rare beauty of mind and person.

Clarence has long since begged his lovely cousin's pardon for calling her an "impertinent little beggar," and Frank is not a whit less admiring than ever.

And last, but by no means least, the wine cup is banished from the home of the Howards, nor does it even grace the New Year's board.—Little Corporal.

HELP YOURSELVES.

Don't ask another to do for you what you can easily do for yourself. I've heard a boy say to his little sister, "Run, Katy, and get my hat," or "Bring me a glass of water," when he ought to have served himself, and not lazily asked another to give him what he wanted. And what is worse, I've heard that very boy's little sister call to him from the head of the stairs and say,

"Bring up my doll's apron when you come, please, brother John;" and how do you think he answered? Just in these words.

"I'm not your waiter, miss! Come down and get it for yourself."

But when we think about it, it is not so strange that John should have been so disobliging. It was his selfish love for his own ease, and a disregard of his sister's ease and comfort that made him ask her to do for him so many things that he should have done for himself. The selfish are always disobliging, and John only acted from the mean spirit he was permitting to rule him. If he should read this, I hope he will see, as in a glass, the picture of himself, and be so shamed by the image as to seek to become noble in spirit, more self-dependent, and more obliging to every one around him.—Examiner & Chronicle.

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY, 72 Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance buildings, Liverpool.
Chairman of the London Board.—SAMUEL BAKER, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—CHARLES TURNER, Esq.
The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the Kingdom.
At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following highly satisfactory results were shown:—
FIRE DEPARTMENT.
The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this Kingdom.
The Premiums for the year 1856 being.....£139,069
While the Premiums for the year 1859 are.... 196,148
Showing an actual increase of..... 66,083 or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.
The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more that maintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the moiety of its advance.
LIFE DEPARTMENT.
The amount of new Life Premiums received this year is by far the largest received in any similar period since the commencement of the business, and must far exceed the average of amount received by the most successful offices in the kingdom. The number of policies issued in the year was 832, the sum assured £357,752 6s. 8d., and the premium £12,854 2s. 4d. These figures show a very rapid extension of business during the last ten years. Thus:—

Years.	No. of Policies.	Sums Assured.	New Premiums.
1849 ..	98	£48,764 17 0	£1,380 9 1
1850 ..	199	95,650 9 11	2,627 4 7
1852 ..	422	181,504 19 6	5,828 5 10
1854 ..	408	161,848 13 4	4,634 16 0
1856 ..	708	297,560 16 8	8,859 3 11
1858 ..	832	357,752 6 8	12,854 3 4

The remarkable increase in the business of the last four years, is mainly consequent upon the large bonus declared in 1855, which amounted to no less than £22 per cent. per annum on the sums assured and averaged 80 per cent. upon the premiums paid.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GUM REGIALINE, FOR MOUNTING PRINTS.
Patented February, 1867.
ONE OF THE BEST PHOTOGRAPHIC IMPROVEMENTS OF THE DAY.—Since the discovery of Photographic paper printing, it has always been a great desideratum to obtain an adhesive harmless substance as a medium for mounting Prints. Gum-Arabic, Dextrine and other Gums have each had their day and have been rejected for various reasons.
After great labour and expense we have succeeded in inventing and perfecting a purely Vegetable Gum of most extraordinary adhesive properties, containing no deleterious ingredients whatever. It is in every respect superior to Gum-Arabic for mounting prints. We beg to state it has the following advantages over every other Gum now in use in Photography:
1st. It does not Sour, Mould, Ferment or Decay by Age. 2d. It dries very quickly and thoroughly. 3rd. Its light color, perfectly white when applied to paper. 4th. It will not injure the most delicate picture or color. 5th. It being sold in a liquid form saves all the trouble of boiling. 6th. Being very thinly applied, makes a saving of fifty per cent. 7th. The mounted print is much more brilliant than with any other Gum.
Many other qualities makes it the ne plus ultra of adhesive Photographic Gums. One trial will convince all of the extraordinary properties of this Gum.

SELEE'S HAIR LIFE
RICHLY merits the high praise the people of the Provinces now award it. It has proved superior to all other Hair preparations for restoring Grey Hair to its original colour. It is, also, a splendid Hair Dressing, cleaning the Head so perfectly from Dandruff, Scurf, &c.
It invariably stops the Hair from falling off, and is, decidedly a Hair Restorer.
The money will be refunded in all cases where a thorough trial of two bottles fails to give entire satisfaction.

In the Upper Provinces a systematical Business Education is deemed as essential as any other professional education, giving, as it does, the young men an honorable business standing, with a remuneration which he could not otherwise command.
The system is conducted on actual business principles, each student being supplied with cash and merchandise to the amount of one thousand dollars, with which he trades with the Merchants' Emporium College Bank, and also his fellow students. It is surprising how much is mastered in a few months.
The room will be well furnished with desks, book-cases, Merchants' Emporium, Bank, and all other improvements for the well being of the student. Business Forms, Commercial Problems, in short, every difficulty met in Mercantile Life will be fully explained on the Blackboard. Our College has been successful for years in the West, and we can point to our students throughout the country doing well.
Life Scholarships will be issued after the 14th Feb., 1867, at $55 for full course, a discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed till the 1st of March, 1867, in order that we may have a large Class at once.
