SUNDAY MUSINGS.

The sun's bright beams shine through the leafless trees,
Just putting forth the bud so green and fair;
And falls resplendent on a dashing stream,
That moans and murmurs as it moves along.
Down o'er the rocks the waters rapid foam;
But just below it more gently glides,
And the silver bubbles sparkle in the sun.
How sweet to muse upon the works of God,
And all the beauties that adorn the earth.

* * * * * *

'Tis Spring time; the snow's just left
The grassy plot whither I have strayed.
All Nature is harmony. I hear no sound
Save the rushing of the waters as they sweep along.
The flowers have not yet bloomed; but close beside
I see the verdant grass beginto spring,
As if to gaze with pleasure on the scene sublime.
The willows now shoot forth the tender blossom,
While the cowslip peep beside a patch of snow.
And close along the stream lay huge rocks,
Like the battlements of some city grand,
To guard this lone, secluded spot.
There stands great oaks whose stately arms
Reach half across the stream. The scene is perfect,
Not a sight nor sound but shows some mark or touch of God—
Their Divine Author; who endowed poor finite worms
With sense and power to enjoy the beauties of his creation.
How great thy works Oh God! How small is man,
Numbered with the dust on which he treads;
Yet in him lives and breathes an Immortal Principle,
Which never can give rise to feelings but of gratitude
To Him who implanted within our humble body
Part of His own existence—namely, the breath of Him
Who formed us pure and holy in Eden's lovely bower.

Yet loveliest thought of all, this is the day
That God has hallowed, and called the day of rest;
It is His day; ordered for His own.
We are His stewards, and may we spend its sacred hours,
Wherever we may be, in holy meditation of His works.
And we shall grow to manhood so noble and so pure;
And when, in our declining years, grown feeble, we
Can safe rely upon His mighty arm;
And when death's summons we shall meet,
Will fearless tread the dark'ning shore of time;
He through the vale of death will safely guide,
And land us safe on Canaan's happy shore.

Miscellaneous.

A CRIPPLE FOR LIFE.

"Have you noticed that poor little fellow on crutches at the white house in Marion street?" said one of three ladies who were spending an afternoon together.

"Yes, and it was just in my thoughts to speak of him," was answered. "I noticed the child yesterday. What a sweet, patient face he has! He can't be more than ten years old."

"And a cripple for life!" said the third lady.

Her two friends turned their eyes upon her with looks of inquiry.

"You know him?" remarked one of them.

"Oh, yes. His name is Albert Owings; son of Mr. Edward Owings, one of the best men in our town."

"Has he been long a cripple?"

"About a year."

"How did it happen? Had he a fall?"

"I will tell you about it if you care to listen. The story is a sad one, and but for its lesson and warning, I would not revive it now."

The two ladies drew closer to the speaker, and she went on:—

"Little Albert was a favorite with everybody who knew him. He had a sweet temper, and artless, winning ways from the first. When but three years old he was the pet of the neighborhood. But nothing seemed to spoil him. As he grew older he did not become rude and boisterous like too many children; and yet he was full of life, and loved to romp and play as well as any.

"Year after year was added to his life. The birthdays came and went until he was nine years old. The children's birthdays are always kept in Mr. Owing's house. I was intimate with the family, and was one of the few outside friends who were invited to drop in after tea. I promised myself a pleasant evening, for I knew the charmed circle into which I was going.

"It was early in autumn, and the days were growing shorter. Darkness had fallen when I stood at Mr. Owing's door. I found the family in much distress and alarm. Albert had gone with a neighbor's son to visit a friend of his mother who lived half a mile from the city, and word had been received that he had fallen from a tree and was too much hurt to walk home. Mr. Owings and his mother had just left in a carriage, taking the doctor with them.

"For over an hour we waited in painful anxiety. Then the father and mother returned, bringing the poor boy with them. A bed, on which he was lying, had been placed in the carriage. He was helpless, and in great suffering. It took us a long time to get him out of the carriage and up stairs to his bed; for the slightest movement of his body made him cry out with pain. No bones were broken, but the doctor said there were serious internal injuries. From the hips down he was paralyzed. He could move his arms, but not his legs.

"Oh, that was a sad, sad night! Albert's sufferings was so great that anodynes had to be given before he could get ease or sleep."

"How did it happen?" asked one of the ladies. "He fell from a tree, you said?"

"I will answer your question as nearly as I can in Albert's own words. One day, about a week after the accident, I was sitting with the poor boy, who lay helpless in bed, free from pain, I am glad to say, when I asked him to tell me just how it all happened. A slight color came into his pale face, and a look I could not understand into his eyes. His mother, who was sitting by, noticed this change in his countenance.

"'Tell us all about it, my son,' she said, as she leaned over him. 'I don't know yet just how it was.'

"He put his arms around her neck and held her face close to his own for over a minute. On releasing her, I saw that his eyes were wet and had a look of doubt and trouble.

"'You were not doing anything wrong, I hope, Albert?' said his mother.

"'No ma'am,' he answered quickly. 'Nothing that I knew to be wrong. But may be somebody else was.'

"'Who?'

"He did not reply, but looked from his mother's face to mine in an uncertain way.

"'Who was doing wrong, dear?' asked his mother.

"'Mrs. Kline, maybe.'

"'How?'

"'When she gave me that glass of currant wine.'

"'A glass of currant wine! You didn't tell me of that before.'

"'No, ma'am.'

"'Why, Albert?'

"'I don't know, mamma. It seemed as if I couldn't.'

"I shall never forget the sadness of his large, bright eyes as they rested on his mother's face.

"'Tell me all about it, now, darling, don't keep back anything.'

"'I won't keep back a word, mamma,' he said, 'I was just this way that it happened:—We went out to Mrs. Kline's, Willy Lawson and I, as you said we might. And Mrs. Kline seemed so glad to see us. I told her it was my birthday, and then she seemed more pleased, and kissed me, and stroked my hair, and patted my cheeks, and said I must have something in honor of the day. I didn't know what she meant until she brought in a waiter with cakes and three glasses of wine. 'It won't hurt you,' she said 'It's only currant wine. I made it myself.' So we took one glass and Willy another. 'Here's to you, good health, and many happy returns of the day,' said Mrs. Kline, taking the other glass and drinking. We drank too, and ate just as much cake as we wanted. Then we went out of doors to play.'

"'Was it a full glass of wine?' asked Mrs. Owings, choking in her voice.

"'Brimful,' answered the boy.

"'And you drank it all?'

"'Yes, ma'am, every drop.'

"'And what then?'

"'Oh, it burnt all down inside of me like fire, and made my face red, and set my knees trembling. I got up into my head, too, and made it feel so large and strange! I was hot all over. So I went down to the spring house and washed my face in the cool water; and that made me feel better. We sat there, Willy and I, playing in the brook. We built a little dam, and sailed bits of wood and bark on the water. After a while Mrs. Kline came out, and said she was afraid we'd get our clothes wet and muddy, and told us there was a chestnut tree in the wood, back of the house, and she thought the burrs were beginning to open and drop the nuts. So off we ran to the wood and found the tree. But though we saw green bunches of chestnut burrs hanging up on the limbs, not a single nut could we find on the ground. We threw sticks and stones, but didn't knock any down they were so high. 'If it wasn't such a big tree, I'd climb it,' said Willie. 'I'm not afraid,' said I, 'feeling just as brave and strong as if I'd been a man. So at the tree I went, Willy helping me, until I could get hold of the lowest limb and pull myself up. I don't know what made me do it, for I never tried to climb a big tree like that before in all my life. I have thought about it, since lying here, ever so much, and I think it must have been the wine that made me do it. I heard paps say once that when wine wassin the wit was out. And I'm sure the wit was out of my head, or I'd never have gone up that chestnut tree. When I got out on the limb, which was almost as big as a tree itself, I felt as hot all over as when I drank the glass of currant wine. My arms and legs were trembling, and my head buzzing and turning round. I had to shut my eyes and hold on to the limb to keep from falling.

"'After a while I felt better, and then stood up on the limb and reached to one above, pulling and scrambling until I got to a higher place. Then the trembling and turning in my head came again, and I had to hug my arms about a limb to keep from dropping right down. I was 'way up now, ever so far from the ground, as high as a second-story window. Then it came over me, all at once, how I was to get down; and I felt so scared and weak, and my head went round so, that I couldn't hold on. One of my feet slipped and I felt myself going. Oh, it was dreadful! I didn't know anything after that, until I found myself in bed at Mrs. Kline's, and she crying and going on; and it all came back to me.'

"We sat, Mrs. Owings and I, for a good while after the child finished his story, not speaking a word, until he said, 'I'm sure it was the wine, mamma. I'd never thought of climbing the tree if it hadn't been for the wine. Somehow I wasn't just myself after I drank it. But don't be angry with Mrs. Kline, she wanted to honor my birthday; and didn't think it would hurt me.'

"We looked at each other for a few moments. Mrs. Owings tried to speak, but her voice choked in the effort. Her boy crippled for life lay before her, and the hand that had struck him down was the hand of one who loved him. It had been lifted in kindness—alas! what mistaken kindness!"

The lady ceased. Over the faces of her two friends there fell shadows of pain. Both of them sat, with their eyes cast down for a long while.

"That a cause so light should work so sad a disaster!" said one of them at length, sighing deeply as she spoke.

"A cripple for life! And all from a single glass of currant wine, offered in honor of his birthday!" said the other, echoing the sigh of her friend. "Why," she added, the color coming suddenly into her face and then as suddenly fading out, "I did that very thing to a dear little nephew only a week ago! And now I remember that he came near being run over by a horse on his way home; and that when I asked him about it he said he couldn't just tell how it was, but he kind of forgot himself and didn't think about taking care, as he always did, when crossing a street. It never came to me, until this moment that the wine had confused his little brain."

"If it has power to confuse the brains of strong men," answered the lady who had told the story of Albert's fall from a chestnut tree, "how much more the weak and delicate brains of children!"

"What a warning!" exclaimed the other. "I will never give even the lightest wine to a child again."

"Men as well as children have been made cripples for life through a glass of wine offered by a friendly hand," said the lady. "There is no safety when the brain is stimulated above the healthy action. No one can tell the moment when life or limb may depend on the cool head and steady hand, when the slightest confusion of mind may bring terrible disaster. Let us, then, who have so much influence over the customs of society, set our faces against this thing of offering wine to our friends. We can work a great reform if we will. Taking this poor, crippled child as a text, we may preach temperance sermons to men, women, and children of such force that none can withstand us. What say you, friends?"

And they joined hands, promising to set their faces against a custom so full of danger. Many bottles of currant wine, and blackberry wine, and cherry-bounce were emptied on the ground by these ladies, and also by others to whom they preached their temperance sermons. The text whenever announced was sure to gain listeners.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

A WISE FATHER.—The eminent Patrick Henry left in his will the following important passage:—

"I have now disposed of all my property to my family; there is one thing more I wish I could give them, and that is, the Christian religion. If they had that, and I had not given them one shilling, they would be rich; and if they had not that, and I had given them all the world, they would be poor.

AFAR OFF AND NEAR.—Sorrows are like tempest clouds; in the distance they look black, but when above us, scarcely gray. As sad dreams indicate coming joy, so will it be with the so-often torturing dream of life when it hath passed.—J. P. Ritcher.

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY, 92 Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance buildings, Liverpool.
Chairman of the London Board.—SAMUEL BAKER, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—CHARLES TURNER, Esq.
The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.
At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following highly satisfactory results were shown:—
FIRE DEPARTMENT.
The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.
The Premiums for the year 1856 being.....£159,069
While the Premiums for the year 1858 are.... 196,143
Showing an actual increase of..... 66,058 or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.
The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than maintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the moiety of its advance.
LIFE DEPARTMENT.
THE amount of new Life Premiums received this year is by far the largest received in any similar period since the commencement of the business, and must far exceed the average of amount received by the most successful offices in the kingdom. The number of policies issued in the year was 852, the sum secured £357,752 5s. 5d., and the premium £12,854 3s. 4d. These figures show a very rapid extension of business during the last ten years. Thus:—

Years.	No. of Policies.	Sums Assured.	New Premiums.
1848	98	£48,764 17 0	£1,330 9 1
1850	190	95,550 9 11	2,627 4 7
1852	423	181,504 10 6	5,828 5 10
1854	498	161,848 13 4	4,694 16 0
1856	703	297,560 16 8	8,850 3 11
1858	852	357,752 6 8	12,854 3 4

The remarkable increase in the business of the last four years, is mainly consequent upon the large bonus declared in 1855, which amounted to no less than £2 per cent. per annum on the sums assured and averaged 80 per cent. upon the premiums paid.
PERCY M. DOVE, Manager and Actuary.
