A WISH.

I ask not golden stores of wealth,
Or rank, and pomp, and state;
The noble's glittering coronet,
The mansion of the great.
I care not that around my brow
Fame's laurel wreath should twine;
Or that on history's glowing page
My name may proudly shine.

I envy not the calm retreat,
From worldly noise and strife,
The lowly cot, the flower-gemmed path,
The simple joys of life.
I ask not that in soft repose
My peaceful days may glide,
As the light bark is borne along
The deep, unruffled tide.

But this I ask; that while I live,
I may not live in vain;
For I would cheer the aching heart,
And soothe the mourner's pain;
Would wipe away grief's bitter tears,
The poor man's struggles aid;
And guide the wanderer back, whose steps
From virtue's path have strayed.

Then, whether affluence and state
Shall be my destined lot,
Or 'neath the humble cottage-roof
I dwell, it matters not;
If I, by self-denying love,
Earth's weary ones can bless,
And deepen, as I pass along
The stream of happiness.

Miscellaneous.

THE LAND OF "I DON'T KNOW."

There was once upon a time a little boy—"Ah, there now," I hear you exclaim, "that is the way so many stories begin! I wish you would tell us his real name, and where he lived?"

I might if I liked; but, perhaps, when he is grown older, and quite got over the bad habit that was the cause of the misadventure I am going to relate, he would not like to have you pointing at him and reminding him of his fault; so you must be quiet and let me tell my story in my own way, and be careful that you do not get into similar trouble.

"Tom" lived in a very pretty house, in a very lovely garden. He was fond of reading, and had a great many books, that ought to have been kept on a shelf by themselves, but—Every night before he went to bed he used to take his favorite toy and his favorite book for the time being, and place them on a chair by his bedside, so that he might have them close at hand the moment he awoke. Like other boys, he was very often restless at night, and then he would knock them over and break their backs, and altogether behave very badly to them. In the morning, too, when he ought to have washed and dressed as quickly as possible, he would take one of his books and place it on his wet wash-stand and while he washed one eye would read out of the other, till the poor books got almost as much water as his face, and their red and blue covers were all blistered and defaced by soapy water.

His mother and sisters called him "Untidy Tom," after that sad boy in the story of Struwelpeter; and, indeed, he was quite as bad if not worse.

He had still another fault. If his mother asked him where anything was, the answer was sure to be, "I don't know."

"Where is your hat, Tom?"

"I don't know."

"Where is your whip, Tom?"

"I don't know."

"Where is your watering-pot?"

"I am sure I don't know."

And once when he was amusing himself by acting "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the shrubbery by himself, and had borrowed his sister's black doll to personate "Topsy," he left the poor little negress out in a dreadful snow storm, and when asked where she was, of course answered, "I don't know."

His mother was very much displeased with him, and said, "Tom, to-morrow I must really take some severe measures with you, unless this is the last time I hear 'I don't know from your lips."

Tom was very much frightened. He did not wish to vex his mother or be unkind to his sisters. He did not intend to break his books' backs or give Topsy her death of cold; but he was so very very careless and forgetful that he was always doing some mischief.

Others besides his mother were angry with him and determined to punish him. It is all very well treating books and playthings as if they had no life in them, but you may do it once too often.

One night when Tom was fast asleep in his bed, his room, as usual, strewn with his clothes and playthings, there was a great discussion going on though he did not hear it.

"I'll not stand this any longer," said Masterman Ready, stepping from the boy's bookshelf. "I'm an old man, and I'll not be insulted in this way. Here it is near a fortnight ago that that young rogue, who is sleeping so sougly there, under half a dozen blankets, actually tore off my only coat, and since then I have been shivering all through this bitter weather in nothing but my shirt. I should like him to feel as cold as I do!"

"And I," said the Lady of the Lake, who was standing near, "would gladly see him punished. He has thrown so much soapy water over me, I feel as if I were in a Scotch mist. I wish he was on the top of Ben Nevis with a good fog rolling round him."

"And I," said Robinson Crusoe, "owe him a grudge, not so much for the injuries he has inflicted on me personally, but for his disgraceful conduct to that interesting Black Lady who lies buried under the snow yonder.—I make no doubt she was nearly related to my beloved servant, Friday, and any slight cast on him or any of his relations shall be avenged by me."

The accusations against the unlucky boy now came in so thickly that it was impossible to make them all out. Whips without lashes, lashes without handles, guns without locks, ramrods without guns—the hubbub became so great, the wonder is the whole house was not roused by the voices of his accusers.

But even Tom slept quietly on, little dreaming what was in store for him, till he felt an icy hand laid on his arm, and a stern voice desired him to rise. He was too much alarmed to speak, but one glance showed him that old Masterman Ready, clad in nothing but a tattered shirt, stood at his bedside, with many others whom in the dim light he could not recognize.

No time was allowed him to look about.—He was quickly blindfolded, dragged from his nice warm bed, and out into the bitter night air, with the white snow beneath his feet, and the clear frosty starlit sky above his head, his only covering his nightgown.

His enemies hurried on at a fearful pace, and his poor feet ached with the cold, and his legs trembled under him. At length, just as he was completely exhausted, they removed the bandage from his eyes. Ah! what a sight he beheld! There was the drum he had broken, no longer a poor inanimate thing, to be kicked and beaten at any one's will and pleasure, but a living moving being on legs, who rushed up to Tom and inquired in a haughty voice, "Why did you break in my head?"

And then the watering-pot came and demanded, "Why did you leave me in the mud at the bottom of the pond?" And a double barrelled gun, with a lady-like-looking pistol hanging on his arm, upbraided him for his cruel usage, and whips and spades, and trumpets and hoops, all came and reviled him; and, lastly, his late victim, the poor black doll, in a winding-sheet of snow, said, in a melancholy voice, "You are worse than an American slave-dealer; had you no compassion on my warm African blood, that you left me to perish beneath the snow?"

Poor Tom seated himself on the hard ground and burst into tears, but the more he wept the more his tormentors jeered him; and really Masterman Ready and Robinson Crusoe seemed to incite the others to insult him, and the poor little boy was very miserable.

At last his strange companions, tired of playing with him, or afraid of the bitter cold wind, took their departure and Tom was left alone.

Such companionship had been bad enough, but solitude was worse. "O! I must find somebody," cried the poor boy, starting up, and trying to make his night-gown cover his poor little ankles.

"I don't know," sighed the wind.

"Which is the way home?" shouted Tom.

"I don't know," shrieked a curlew.

"Where's my mother?" screamed the boy.

"I don't know," croaked a frog in a neighboring morass.

Too frightened to speak any more, Tom groped his way along in the darkness. As day dawned he came to a directing post.—"Saved!" thought Tom, as he climbed up it like a sailor-boy up a mast. Imagine his horror. It directed him to the "Land of I don't know!" Tom slipped down quicker than he went up, and pursued his way. Presently he came to another finger-post. It was lighter now, and he could read it without the trouble of climbing; and what think you he read?—"This is the land of I dont know!"

The day passed and night came on, and still he wandered up and down, while strange voices mocked him with the oft-repeated phrase, "I don't know," "I don't know," varied sometimes with, "This is the land of I don't know!"

Poor Tom, half-mad with terror, hunger and cold, rushed headlong on, till a sudden light, a sudden breaking of the mist, showed him that he stood at the edge of a precipice, a deep blue lake far below. Then he knew where he was; on the very topmost ridge of Pinnimmon, and the blue lake shining below he knew to be the source of the Severn, that his father had shown him, a year before, when travelling in Wales.

Fearful of falling, he uttered a piercing shriek, and called aloud on his mother to help him. Conceive his joy when he found himself in her arms, and heard her well-known voice reassuring him, "You are safe, my boy, quite; what has frightened you?"

"O! mother, I have been to the 'Land of I don't know;' and, only think, it is on the top of Pinnimmon."

You may be sure Tom did not soon forget his adventure. He got Masterman Ready a new coat. He dug up Topsy from under the snow, and fished the watering-pot from the depths of the pond; and if he ever mislaid anything he tried to find it again, for he said, "I have no wish to go again to the 'Land of I don't know.'"

And you, my young reader, the next time you are asked where the Severn rises, say, "In the 'blue lake' near the summit of Pinnimmon, in the county of Montgomery, Wales," and you will be A 1 in your class for a week.—People's Magazine.

THE MARKET VALUE OF A SOUL.

"The real value of a soul is much greater than its market value." 'Market value!' I hear some one say: 'why, what do you mean?' I mean by market value the price that souls commonly sell for. 'Sell for! why, human souls are not in the market to be bought and sold.' Indeed, my brethren, I fear they are. The devil is bidding for souls all the while, and the market value of each soul may be said to be that which its owner is willing to let it go for. Every time that a man, under the influence of some temptation, deliberately commits a grievous sin, does he not know that the consequence is the forfeiture of the soul's eternal liberty and happiness? What is that but trading with the devil who takes nothing but souls in payment.

"The devil is a pedlar, and goes about to sell his ill-gotten wares for souls. Ah! how many a clerk has sold himself to the devil for a few pieces of stolen silver from the drawer! How many a driver or car conductor, for the privilege to embezzle a few half-dimes a day! How many a miserable girl, for a stolen dress, a pair of shoes or stockings, a bracelet, a ring, a breast-pin!

"The devil is a smuggler. How many a merchant has traded away his soul for a fraudulent return to the custom house, or the tax commissioner—sealing the horrible contract with an oath.

"The devil is a pawn-broker. That girl pawns away to him religion and her soul, for the sake of a marriage! ay! and pledges away beforehand the souls of the children that may be born to her.

"The devil is an attorney. When people buy and sell real estate, there is always a third party the lawyer. The same rule holds in every sinful transaction. See that ragged, wretched man leaning on the counter at the grocery. Is it only a dime he gives for his drink? No! but he lays down on the counter his wife's heart, and his children's bread. And that other man that sells it to him behind the bar! Is it only so much fiery drink he sells, to help his neighbour on to ruin? No! but as he empties that decanter, he pours away his own hopes of heaven, his part in God, the water that baptized him, the share he has in the blood of Christ that died for him. There is a third party here, a hideous thing, curled up like a black ape on the counter. He acts as attorney between the parties. He claims his fees, and for payment takes a mortgage on the souls of both.

"Oh! if I had the power, I would compel that wicked fiend to come up here in his own shape, and make him point out the unfortunate creatures that he has bought, and confess what he paid for each. I can imagine his confession to be something like this: "I bought that miserly-looking man for a few promissory notes and some tenement houses. That other one near him cost me a corporation contract. Some of my bargains were cheaper. I bought two or three of them, soul and all, for the right to vote upon a false oath. That young girl with paint on her face, for a night's dance and a beau. That other one for a new cape; and that old woman sold out for some blankets and a few bars of stolen soap.—That little politician gave me his soul for an office; and do you see that man that looks as if the wages of all the laborers of the parish had gone into his one body—he and I trade in souls; I bought his for a corner grocery, and he brings me in a whole army of drunkards," and then when the wicked spirit had ended his confession, I would call for an angel's trumpet, that I might shout over the heads of the whole congregation, with a voice like that which will one day startle the dead in their coffins, those words of Jesus Christ: 'What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?'"

"I think our church will last a good many years yet," said a waggish deacon to his minister; "I see the sleepers are very sound."

THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.
It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.
If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve them—by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flannels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal.
Sold by most respectable Grocers and Druggists, in Packets Three Cents Each, sufficient for 30 Gallons of water, or Twelve for Thirty Cents, also in Boxes containing 144 Packets, price Three Dollars each. Be sure to ask for Pickstone's Washing Crystal, as there are spurious imitations. Do not condemn it untried. Make one trial! Protected by Act of Parliament.

W. B. S. TAYLOR'S FLEXIBLE GAS LIGHT TUBEING, for Gas Stoves, Gas Portables, Gas Drop Lights, etc.—Patented.—This is the most perfect as well as the best finished Tubeing offered for sale. As now made, it is perfectly proof against all changes of the atmosphere, as well as against the action of Gas. It is warranted to be such. This is what no other Tubeing offered for sale has been. The Gas cannot penetrate it, hence it is free when in use from that disagreeable smell peculiar to all previous kinds of Tubeing. For sale by
