Poetry.

AFTERWARD.

No sorrow seemeth joyous,
No bitter tasteth sweet,
No grief but leaves a furrow,
No pleasure is couplete,
Here!

But, soul, be ever patient;
Count not thy trials hard;
The joyous fruit shall greet thee;
It cometh afterward—
Here!

Deep through thee runs the plowshare;
The soil is harsh and dry;
But it's only growing ready
For harvests by-and-by—
There!

Hot are the tears that blister
Thy cheeks so pale and wan;
While empty hands are groping
For some beloved one gone!
Here!

Bright shall the sunbeams glitter
Above the jasper gates,
Where many a joyous welcome
To greet thy coming waits,
There!

O soul! be ever patient,
Though sorrow seemeth hard;
For bliss shall come for sighing;
Not yet, but afterward—
There!

Miscellaneous.

RUNNING AWAY.

George was discontented with farm life. He complained that it was drudge, drudge—never any rest, and very little pleasure in it. He was tired of foddering and milking cows, of hoeing, weeding, raking, husking. He "was never meant for it."

What should he do? What would he do if he could? He hardly knew. He had some fine ideas of the sea. He sung of it, as "the bold, the grand, the ever free." He fancied that he should like to ride its proud waves, to battle with its storms, to play with it and conquer it in accordance with fanciful book-talk. Then he wanted to see everything—whales, dolphins, flying-fish, all the wonders of the earth, and all the celebrated countries and peoples.

As George grew discontented he grew undutiful. He worked grudgingly, slowly, and sometimes badly.

"How I do hate to milk!" he said, as he took his pail. "I'm sick to death of hoeing," he said, when sent to work in the cornfield.

His father was often displeased with him, and as often reproved him. This made George the more dissatisfied, and he kept saying inwardly, "I will not stay here, to work hard and be scolded for nothing. What shall I do?" he seriously questioned; "shall I go to sea? It would trouble father if I did; that would be one good thing," he wickedly and foolishly thought. The old man would miss him, and be sorry that he had scolded him so much. But his mother! It would break her heart—it might kill her. He loved his mother; how could he give her pain? No, he could not leave her. He worked on more patiently and dutifully for a while. Then he was over-tired, and grew careless. His father was displeased, and may have been too severe. His words decided George. He would leave him. He would bear it from him no longer. He would seek a better life.

"A better life!" Poor, foolish, ignorant, and wicked boy? Where is there a better life than home, where parents love and care for us? where they cherish our virtues and reprove our faults? Look at the forlorn stranger, the homeless one; a leaf on the wind, a fragment on the sea, a waif—who cares for him? Who cherishes, who blesses him?

George slept little that night. He was awake before the dawn, dressed, and, with bundle in hand, had left his home forever. How strange! how foolish! how mad! He did not look back till he came to the turn which shut it entirely from his view. Then he paused, leaned against the fence, and took a last look at the dear old place. It was imprinted on his heart every feature of it, so deeply that he could always call it up and see it as a living picture.

But he would see it again in reality before long. He would come back to it, proud with success. He would gladden it again. He was grieving its loved inmates now; he would make them rejoice. A dark, terrible thought crossed his mind. Would they all be there when he should come back? How could he bear to come and find them not, only their cold, still, unforgiving graves? for he must be forgiven. He was already half penitent.

"God protect them, the dear ones!" he whispered; "God keep them!" and, choking down a sob, he grasped his bundle more tightly, and hurried on his way.

It was the evening of the next day, and feverish and foot-sore, he threw himself upon the ground to rest. Rest! he could not rest, and springing up, he pursued his way again.

We will not follow him in his weariness, his loneliness, his perplexities, his heart full of yearnings and regrets, misgivings, and fears, and remorse. He was a wretched boy, hurrying on after a dream, but carrying enough wretchedness in himself to spoil even a paradise. Let us go to his home.

"Where is George? I haven't seen him this morning," says the father.

"How unusually late he sleeps!" says the mother.

The sun is high in the heavens, and the cows are lowing for the pasture, still unmilked. The sister is sent to wake him. Alas! she will never wake him more. She finds the open door, the deserted room.

"George is up," she says, returning.

"Where can he be?" responds the mother.

"Have you called him?" she enquires.

The barn, the woods echo back his name in vain. He will never hear himself called by a father's lips again. And this is the last time the father will speak his name without a tear, or groan, or inward sigh.

The breakfast is eaten in silence. Then the father forgetting his work, walks the room and says "It is so strange about George. He never did so before."

But he does not breathe his dreadful fears. No; if—if it is so, let the truth be broken slowly as may be to the gentle-hearted mother.

The mother goes quietly and alone to her poor boy's deserted room. If she had suspected anything before, she knows all now. God help her! Such faintness, such sickness of soul, can come to us but a few times ere we die. God be thanked for this! Death itself is nothing to the dying still in life.

George's room is but little changed. It was always neat and orderly, and is so now. He left it so on purpose, thinking of his mother. But some things are gone—his best clothes, his portemonaie, his little writing-case, a book or two are missed. Is his Bible gone? Thank God, it is! O, there is some consolation—a little softening of the anguish in this! The mother prays—"God of the Bible, God of the wanderer, bless my boy! Save him—O, save him! For the sake of the beloved Son of Mary, hear a mother's prayer."

The mother's face tells the father all.

"God help me?" he exclaimed. "Was I severe on the boy?" he asks himself. "O, that I had been more gentle, more considerate and patient! Have I driven out mine own son—him whom I loved?"

He hastens after him. Which way—where? To the nearest city. Arrived there, where shall he go? To the wharves, to the ships, to all his acquaintances. He advertises; he enquires of every one who may by possibility know anything of the wanderer. In vain.

But he must search on. He cannot return to the broken-hearted mother without tidings. They come at last. In another city George had shipped for a long sea voyage. Blessed news! He is still alive. He may be found. The vessel may not have sailed, and the son may be regained and persuaded back to home and love. But O, if the father be too late! If the vessel with George on board should have sailed! He is too late—the vessel has sailed.

"When will the ship Julia return?"

"In three years."

"What a voyage! In three years the boy will be a man, and have forgotten us all. Three years without him will bow me to the earth. Ah, it will not take so long to break the heart of her who bore him! "Three years, did you say, sir?" the father again inquires.

"She is bound on a three years' voyage," was the reply. "Have you any one on board of her?"

"A son."

"Wait a minute; the ship has been spoken. We've news from her."

The father listens. The record is read; latitude and longtitude is given.

"Ship Julia, one day out from New-Bedford; George Allen fell from the masthead to the deck, and was instantly killed."

What is the matter? How pale the man is! Does he breathe?

"Is your name Allen, sir?" is asked.

No answer, but the swell and heave of a breaking heart.

"I'm sorry. I beg your pardon, sir. I did not dream that the young man who was killed could be anything to you."

"He was my son—my only son. How am I to go back to his mother? How can I break her already smitten heart? O, God, be with her and support her!"

Do you question more concerning poor George's death? I have told all that could be learned. And surely his fate is enough to teach you contentment and patience in your lot, to warn you against the folly of boyish wilfulness and self-seeking, and enforce anew the command, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."—Golden Hours.

THE DUTIFUL SON.

A class of six boys was called to recite. Five were handsomely dressed, and carried gold watches; the sixth wore patched clothes, and when he wanted to know the time, he had to glance at Mr. Graham's clock in the corner.

"Who is he?" asked a visitor of Mr. Graham, when the class had passed from the room.

"Which one?"

"The one who will make his mark; the poor one, to be sure."

"Ah! why, Judge, he is Jones Brown, the son of a laboring man. He is as honest and persevering a boy as ever the sun shone on."

"I thought so. His address, if you please."

Mr. Grahom gave it without question, though he wondered what the odd Judge was about to do. Mr. and Mrs. Brown and six children were surprised at tea-table that night by a call from the stranger. Jones remembered him as the visitor to the school-room. In five minutes he had told his errand. He was Judge Rood, of Acton; he had taken a fancy to Jones; would Mr. and Mrs. Brown give the boy to him, to be educated as a lawyer in his office?

Mr. and Mrs. Brown were speechless with delight. Jones clasped his hands gratefully. Arrangements were speedily made. Jones had but a month longer to stay at Mr. Graham's school. Then! ah, the glorious then!

Jones was a Christian, anxious every day to serve Jesus with his whole mind, soul, and body. Just now his heart was fairly dancing with joy that God had seemed to open before him such a bright future. Already his little trunk stood packed in the loft chamber. Brothers and sisters gathered about him daily, with little scraps of talk about what they should do without him. The five handsomely dressed boys at Mr. Graham's no longer sneered at his patched clothes or hard hands; it was possible that he might be a Judge himself some day. In view of this, they could condescend to treat him civilly. Jones cared little for all this.

Just a week before he was to go to Judge Rood's, a fire happened in the neighborhood. Mr. Brown, while helping some one to escape, was himself killed. Mrs. Brown, broken-hearted, died, and Jones, on the day he was to have gone to Judge Rood's, stood in the midst of his family, the only protector of brothers and sisters. What was his duty? He looked into the eyes of each of the helpless ones, and, with a trembling step, went up to his little loft chamber. The children could hear him walk to and fro; then came a silence. Jimmy peeped through a crack in the door; Jones was on his knees. Presently he came down, wrote a letter, and took it to the office; then walked down the street straight to Mr. Jordan's machine shop.

"Will you hire me, Mr. Jordan?"

"Why, I thought you were to be the young Judge?"

"That is past; my family need me."

"Why, bless you, brave boy, I'd make work if I had'nt it; but here is lies plenty, and I'll give you royal wages."

"Thank you, sir. Can I come to-day?"

"To-day! was there ever such a boy? Yes, in two hours."

"In two hours, then; good-by till that time," said Jones, not a muscle of his face showing the sad heart within.

"God will bless that boy," thought Mr. Jordan, wiping his eyes.

God did bless him, even in this life. For years, without a murmur, he worked in that machine-shop, till the youngest child in his father's family was able to care of herself; then, every difficulty pushed out of the way, Jones went back to study. Helping hands were held out all around, and to-day Jones Brown stands a monument to the blessedness of obedience to that command, "Honor thy father and thy mother."—S. S. Visitor.

PITCH STICKS!—'Oh dear, how it sticks!' cried Willie, who while passing through a street where men were laying a new pavement, formed of asphalt, ran against one of the workmen who was carrying a kettle of the boiling pitch, some of which made great black patches on his clothes.

Pitch is not the only thing that sticks. There are bad habits—oh! how they stick; and the little every day sins that you do not think anything of; and bad companions—oh! how these stick! Far better, children, that you be covered with pitch from head to foot, than consent to go with bad company, or learn bad habits, or read bad books, or say bad things. Remember that there are many other things as black as pitch.

CAUTION! CAUTION! CAUTION!
THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.
It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleansing Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.
If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve them—by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flannels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with PICKSTONE'S Cleansing Crystal.
Sold by most respectable Grocers and Chemists, in Packets THREE CENTS EACH, sufficient for 20 Gallons of water, or Twelve for Thirty Cents, also in Boxes containing 144 Packets, price Three Dollars each. ☞ Be sure to ask for PICKSTONE'S Washing Crystal, as there are spurious imitations. Do not condemn it untried. Make one trial! PROTECTED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.
