MOUNT TABOR.

Methought I saw the chosen three
Who walked so oft with Christ below,
Who saw in sad Gethsemane
Those crimson drops of woe;
That from their living lips I heard
The story of our risen Lord.

They talked to me of Tabor's steep,
How tenderly He led them there;
When weary, faint, they sank to sleep,
He knelt alone in prayer;
That while they slept strange visions came,
They thought the mountain all aflame.

They waked, and saw, with wondering eyes,
What ne'er to other sight was given;
He held communion with the skies,
Bathed in the light of Heaven;
"His face shone as the sun," and lo!
"His raiment glistened white as snow."

They told me of the two that came
On swiftest wing, at Heaven's behest—
Elijah, who, on cloud of flame,
Ascended to his rest;
And Moses, who on Horeb trod,
And "face to face" communed with God.

They told me of their wondering fear,
When, pealing through the silent night,
Came sounds so strange to mortal ear
From yonder world of light:
When God's own voice proclaimed His Son
His well beloved—the Glorious One.

And then they ceased; O stay, I cried,
O linger yet, ye favored three,
And tell me more of Him who died
On that dear cross for me!
Tell me what wondrous theme had they
Who came on such high embassy?

"We knew they spake of His decease,
The woe, the pain of Calvary;
Yet on His brow the light of peace,
Still radiant, we could see—
That brow which sharpest thorns would bear
That man a crown of life might wear.

"They spake of love too great and high,
Too deep and vast for us to know;
But, ah, we knew that He must die,
And this was greatest woe:
We looked, and lo, the vision gone,
Our Jesus stood with us alone!"

And did ye still in Him behold
The sunshine of the father's love?
Was all that seemed of earthly mould
Still radiant from above?
And was it precious thus to be
Alone with such a friend as He?

I questioned, but no voice replied;
The answer to my heart was given;
My path of life was glorified
By this one glimpse of Heaven;
A light celestial round me shone,
While I with Jesus stood alone.

Miscellaneous.

ONE THING AT A TIME.

Never did the sun rise behind a fairer hill than Auburn Ridge; never did a crow fly over a prettier village church than that of Rippleton; and never did there grow a finer oak-tree than that which spread its giant branches far and wide over the village green. The seat that had been placed around this noble tree was rudely formed, but Gerard Blake never complained about it, and no one sat upon it so much as he. So sure as sunset came, so sure was old Gerard to be seen sitting on the wooden bench under the oak-tree of Rippleton Green, often surrounded by a youthful throng, amusing and instructing them with his homely but useful conversation. It was on one of these occasions that he was so often interrupted by the questions of the group about him, that the cheerful old man resolved to let them have their own way, that they might see how little was to be gained by attending to more than one thing at a time.

Gerard was about to tell the boys the history of the church spire, but no sooner did he begin, by saying that Alderman Grant gave fifty pounds towards the expense of it, than Harry Dobbs asked him who Alderman Grant was. "Why," replied Gerard Blake, "I will tell you. Alderman Grant was a great fat man, that kept his coach, and lived up at the Court House. Some people tell a queer story about him. One Summer's day when he was rolling along the turnpike road in his open carriage, with his spaniel dog before him, as pretty a creature as ever ran on four legs——"

"What color was he?" said Bill Pike, "had he a long tail?"

"He had a skin," replied Gerard, "as white as the driven snow, marked over, here and there, with blotches just the color of a sheep's liver. There was a curious tale told about that dog: when it was a puppy, it was waddling about, outside the iron gate, when Farmer Rickett's bull came up, and just as the puppy had got half way under the gate—but I must first tell you that Farmer Ricketts was rather passionate; he married a half sister of mine; in one of his passions he was as near as to two pins falling to a draw-well."

"How was that?" said Tom Billetts.

"You shall hear all about it," replied old Gerard. "Job Tanner, the pump-maker, was employed to sink a well; and in going to work early one morning, he met Frank Hart, who had just come home from the West Indies, where the black folks make the sugar."

"How do they make it?" asked Bill Pike.

"Why," said Gerard, "I hardly know whether I rightly understand it myself; but I'll give you the best account I can. The blacks have got thick lips and woolly hair; they were first kidnapped in their own country, and brought over the sea in ships, stuffed in very cruelly close together, as I've heard say, till they could hardly get breath."

"But how do they kidnap the blacks?" inquired Peter Fuller.

"How do they kidnap 'em! It would take me some time to tell you that," said Gerard, "but I don't mind if I try. I once knew an old sailor, and he had been in the foreign lands where the black folks live, and where lions and big snakes, and all manner of frightful creatures are to be found."

"But how do the black people manage to kill the lions and the big snakes?" asked Joe Barnes.

"In different ways," said Gerard, "when they set out after a lion with ten or twelve dogs. The dog, I take it, is about as useful a creature as any, except it be a horse or a cow; for in our country he hunts for us, and guards houses; in another he pulls the people along over the snow in a sledge."

"What's a sledge?" cried out Ned Hall, "and how do the dogs pull it along?"

"I will tell you," said old Gerard. "In some outlandish countries they have snow on the ground all the year round, and the frost is so keen, that the fingers and ends are almost pinched off."

"But how do they wear no gloves?" inquired Harry Dobbs, opening his eyes wide.

"Yes, but not such as you see in this country."

"What sort are they?" cried out Peter Fuller and Ned Hall, both together.

"Why, if you will listen, you shall know from beginning to end. For the old sailor that I spoke of had been there, and he told me about the gloves, as well as about the Black Hole of Calcutta, and a score of other things."

"The Black Hole of Calcutta! what is that?" said Joe Barnes; "I never heard of that; tell us all about the Black Hole of Calcutta!"

"That I will, and welcome," replied Gerard Blake; "but mayhap it will be just as well for some of you to tell me first what you know of the church spire."

"You began to tell us," said Harry Dobbs, "but you did'nt go on."

"Why! no, I don't know how I could," said Gerard, "when you would have me tell you all about fat Alderman Grant; but do you remember what I told about him that surprised you so, and the tale about the spaniel dog?"

"You never told us anything about it, nor about the spaniel, either, or we should have remembered it," said some of the rest of them.

"Well," said old Gerard, enjoying the joke that he had put upon the young people in answering their questions, "perhaps you know something about Farmer Rickett and the draw-well; or how the blacks folks make sugar, and kill lions and big snakes!"

But no; not one among them knew anything about one of these things.

"This is very odd," said Gerard, looking first at one and then at another, "that you forget so soon; however, surely you know what a sledge is, and how the dogs pull it along; and what sort of gloves the folks in cold countries wear; and if you will tell me, then I will tell you all about the Black Hole of Calcutta."

The boys all stood staring, not knowing what to say, while old Gerard, in a pleasant way, gave them this good advice: "The hound that runs after many hares at once, is not likely to catch one of them; and the lad that will have half a dozen tales told to him, without having patience to hear one of them to the end, will find himself in the same situation. If you had listened patiently, I would have told you all about the church spire, and Alderman Grant and his spaniel dog, and Farmer Rickett, too; and if that had not been enough, in my rough way I would have made it as plain to you as two sticks, how the blacks are kidnapped, how they make sugar, and kill lions and big snakes. Every one should have known what a sledge is, and how the dogs pull it along; what sort of gloves the outlandish people wear among the snow; and, if there had been any spare time left, you should have had the tale of the Black Hole of Calcutta into the bargain; but after all, the lesson you have learned of your disappointment may do you more good than all of them put together. Be content my lads to hear and to do one thing at a time, and it is ten to one but you will become wiser, and get over more work than if you follow the bad plan of undertaking many things at once. My father used to say to me, 'Gerard, do one thing at a time; don't be reading your Bible when you ought to be at the plough, and don't go to plough when you ought to be reading your Bible. It is right enough, lad, that you should work to get your bread; therefore be up in the morning and put your hand to the plough-tail betimes; it is right, too, that you should hear the word of eternal life, therefore read your Bible, and may God's grace bless it and make its promises your comfort here and your joy hereafter. But mind, what you do, do heartily, and be content in attending to one thing at a time.'

"Remember what Jesus Christ said to Martha, when she was careful and troubled about many things, 'One thing is needful' (Luke 10: 41, 42). The advice I have given will apply very well to earthly things; but remember, there is nothing in the whole world of such importance to you, as the salvation of your immortal souls. May you all choose that better part which shall not be taken away from you.'"

Gerard Blake got up and walked slowly across the green, and the boys moved off in a different direction, each one making the wise resolution never to interrupt old Gerard in the middle of a story, and to be content with attending to one thing at a time.—New York Observer.

THE OLD BROWN SILK DRESS.

'Mrs. Smith at such a grand wedding and in her old brown silk dress! She has had it for the last six years.'

'I know it. The idea of a person as well off as she is keeping a dress that length of time! But she looked well. The dress was altered to suit the present fashion.'

'But such meanness! I do not call it it economy, but meanness. I am tired of seeing her wear the dress. If she were not able to get a new silk, it would be different. I wish I had the money she had I would show people how to dress.'

'Girls,' said grandma, 'I am afraid that you are not cultivating very charitable dispositions. As the brown-silk dress seems to interest you, let me tell you a little affair connected with it.

'About two weeks ago, Mrs. Smith called on me. I had just prepared to go out to do some shopping. She proposed to accompany me. On our way home she informed me that she intended to purchase a new dress. While we were in the shop examining some rich silks, Mrs. Winslow came in. Seeing Mrs. Smith, she informed her of the destitute condition of a family she had just visited. The father had been sick and unable to work. The mother had been toiling to support her family. She was now sick, and three of her children. One was lying dead in the house. They were so poor that they had not a sufficiency of fuel or food. Their rent should have been paid in advance, but on account of sickness the father had been unable to do so. The landlord had consented to wait until the end of the month. The father was still unable to pay, and the family were threatened with being turned into the street that very day.

'Mrs. Smith asked if they were worthy people. Mrs. Winslow assured her they were, and giving their address, she urged Mrs. Smith to visit them. Mrs. Smith had just decided to purchase a dress pattern from a costly piece of silk. 'I will not purchase the dress now,' she said to the clerk. And turning to me, she remarked: 'I feel it my duty to visit these poor people and sppply their necessities before purchasing anything for myself. Will you accompany me?'

'I did so. We found the family in great distress. They were Christian people, and had been praying to God to send them help. Mrs. Smith immediately paid the rent then due, and another month in advance, besides ordering fuel and food. She has since sent them many little articles of comfort. 'I feel better,' she said, 'than if I had bought a new dress. I will make over my old one and will wear it at the wedding.'

'And this is why Mrs. Smith wore 'that old brown-silk dress.' She is not mean, but a noble self denying Christian woman. And I can safely say there is no one that I am acquainted with who gives so freely as she does.'

"I had never heard of her being benevolent before.'

'She gives quietly, not noising it abroad. There are many families who owe the necessaries and comfort of life to her bounty.'

'I am glad you told us, grandma.' The old brown silk dress will look beautiful to me hereafter. And I will preach me a lesson of charity—charity in judgment, and charity which is love, toward the poor.'—American Messenger.

THE Proprietor of DICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Dickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.

It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crochet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleansing Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately saves all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.

If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change
