Poetry.

THE MASTER HATH NEED OF THE REAPERS.

BY MRS. ANNIE ROWE THOMPSON.

The Master hath need of the reapers,
And mourner, he calleth to thee:
Come out from the valley of sorrow,
Look up to the hill-tops and see
How the fields with the harvest are whitening,
How golden and full is the grain.
Oh, what are thy wants to the summons!
And what are thy griefs and thy pain!

The Master hath need of the reapers,
And, idler, he calleth to thee:
Come out from the mansions of pleasure,
From the halls where the careless may be.
Soon the shadows of eve will be falling
With the mists and the dews and the rain;
O, what is the world and its follies
To the mould and the rust of the grain!

The Master hath need of the reapers,
And, worker, he calleth to thee:
O, what are thy dreams of ambition,
To the joys that hereafter shall be!
There are tokens of storms that are coming,
And summer is fast on the wane;
Then alas! for the hopes of the harvest,
And alas! for the beautiful grain.

The Master hath need of the reapers,
And He calls for thee and for me:
O haste while the winds of the morning
Are blooming so freshly and free;
Let the sound of the scythe and the sickle
Re-echo o'er hill-top and plain
And gather the sheaves in the garner,
For golden and ripe is the grain.

* Written by Mrs. Bishop Thomson just before she was called to the bedside of her dying husband.

Miscellaneous.

DON'T BE TOO CERTAIN.

Ay, now boys, don't be too certain. Remember that nothing is easier than to be mistaken. And if you permit yourself to be mistaken a great many times, everybody will lose confidence in what you say. If you have any doubts remove them by examination before speaking confidently. Don't be too certain.

"John, where is the hammer?"

"It is in the corn-house."

"No, it is not there; I have just been looking there."

"Well, I know it is there; I saw it there not half an hour ago."

"If you saw it there it must be there, of course. But suppose you go and fetch it."

John goes to the corn-house, and presently returns with a small ax in his hand.

"O, it was the ax I saw. The handle was sticking out from a half-bushel measure. I thought it was the hammer."

"Well, don't be too certain another time."

"Yes, father, but I did really think I saw it, or I should not have said so."

"But you said positively that you did see it, not that you thought you saw it. There is a great difference between the two answers. Do not permit yourself to make a positive statement, even about small matters, unless you are quite sure; for if you do, you will find the habit growing upon you, and by and by you will begin to make loose replies to questions of great importance. Don't be too certain."

John wandered off to the house trying to convince himself that he was in the right after all. His father had given him a pretty wooden snow-shovel the winter before, and John had taken great delight in shoveling the clean, white snow during the winter.

It was now the middle of April. The sun shone warm, and the birds sang gaily in the trees. John shouldered his pretty shovel, and was marching off with it.

"What are you going to do with your snow-shovel, John?" said his grandmother.

"I am going to put it away in the barn for the summer, so that it needn't get broken."

"Seems to me I would not put it away just yet; we may have more snow pretty soon," said the old lady.

"O fiddle-dee-dee! we shall not have any more snow until next winter; I'm sure of that. Don't you see how warm it is? The lilacs have all budded, the peas have come up, and the robins and martins are singing about. I know it won't snow any more."

"Well, perhaps it will not," said his grandmother, "but don't be too certain; it looks like a storm now."

"Don't be too certain!" The words rang in John's ears, but he carried on his shovel, and stowed it carefully away in the barn.

The next morning what was his amazement to see the ground white with snow, and the storm violently beating against his chamber window! It continued to snow all day long, and the next morning it lay in great drifts around the house. John waded down to the barn for his shovel, and soon cleared the paths of snow. When he came to his breakfast he declared he would not put away his shovel again until the 1st of July, at the very least.

The same amount of like good reading cannot be had for less money.

FUTURE SUCCESS.

Often and anxiously do parents inquire concerning their young and growing children. Will they succeed? The answer is generally supposed to be very uncertain, and to lie altogether in the distant future. Was there ever a greater mistake? The future is born of the present. Manhood is only the ripened growth of childhood and youth. Causes now operating are the sure prophecy of far reaching results. The conditions of certain success or failure are laid at an early period of life in the training of home. In treating the question as related to business, the Hearth and Home says:

"In nine cases out of ten, no man's life will be a success if he does not bear burdens in his childhood. If the fondness or vanity of father or mother kept him from contact with hard work; if another always helped him out at the end of his row; if, instead of taking his turn at pitching off, he mows down all the time—in short if what was light always fell to him, and what was heavy about the same work to some one else; if he has been permitted to shirk till shirking has become a habit—unless a miracle is wrought, his life will be a failure, and the blame will not be half as much his, as that of weak, foolish parents.

On the other hand, if a boy has been brought up to do his part; never allowed to shirk any legitimate responsibility, or permitted to dodge work, whether or not it made his back ache, or soiled his hands, until bearing heavy burdens became a matter of pride, the heavy end of the wood his from choice—parents, as they bid him good by, may dismiss their fears. His life will not be a business failure. The elements of success are his, and at some time and in some way the world will recognize his capacity.

Take another point. Money is the object of the world's pursuit. It is a legitimate object. It gives bread, and clothing, and homes, and comfort. The world has not judged wholly unwisely when it has made the position a man occupies to hinge more or less on his ability to earn money, and somewhat upon the amount of his possessions. If he is miserably poor, it either argues some defect in his business ability, some recklessness in his expenditures, or a lack of fitness to cope with men in the great battle for gold.

When a country bred boy leaves home, it is generally to enter upon some business the end of which is to acquire property, and he will succeed just in proportion as he has been made to earn and serve in his childhood.

If all the money he has had come of planting a little patch in the spring, and selling its produce after weary months of watching and toil in the fall or from killing woodchucks at six cents a head, or from trapping muskrats, and selling their skins at a shilling; setting snares in the fall for game, and walking miles to see them in the morning before the old folks were up; husking corn for a neighbor, moonlight evenings, at two cents a bushel; working out an occasional day that hard work at home has made possible—he is good to make his pile in the world.

On the contrary, if the boy never earned a dollar, if parents and friends always kept him in spending money—pennies to buy candy, and fish-hooks, and satisfy his imagined wants—and he has grown to manhood in the expectancy that the world will generally treat him with similar consideration, he will always be a makeshift; and the fault is not so much his as that of those about him, who never made the boy depend upon himself—did not make him wait six months to get money to replace a lost jack-knife.

Everybody has to rough it at one time or another. If the roughing comes in boyhood, it does good; if later, when the habits are formed, it is equally tough, but not being educational is generally useless. And the question as to whether a young man will succeed in making money or not depends not upon where he goes, or what he does, but upon his willingness to do "his part," and upon his having earned money, and so gained a knowledge of its worth. Not a little of this valuable experience and knowledge the country boy gets on the old farm, under the tutelage of parents shrewd enough to see the end from the beginning, and to make the labor and grief of children contribute to the success of subsequent life.

Free Baptists especially ought to have the INTELLIGENCER.

WHO ARE YOUR ASSOCIATES.

Allan Winfield lived next door to the schoolhouse. So he used to work until a quarter before nine every morning, and then expeditiously change his working garb for a neat school suit, which made him look like a new boy.

"I wouldn't be digging away there so every morning," said Hugh Rogers, as he lounged over the garden fence about eight o'clock. "I am going over to school to have some fun."

"The teacher does not like to have us come much before school time," said Allen, "and I take more pleasure in seeing these things come on so well in the garden, than in a game of ball, even, though I like that well enough, too."

"Well, you have a curious taste," said the lounger, as he sauntered on to join a company of like-minded lads, who thought play the main business of life.

Mother was sure to call Allen the moment he desired.

"Don't be late, Allen," she said, glancing at the clock, which said one minute of nine.

"Never fear, mother," said the lad, fastening the last button of his jacket. "The teacher just passed. I will be there as soon as he." And giving his mother a hasty good-bye kiss, he bounded down the steps, and in another minute was in his seat at school.

Allen's companions were quickly seen, let him be where he would. They were always the best boys and the best scholars in the school, no matter whether they wore broadcloth or homespun. A noble hearted mother had taught him from childhood that character, not clothes, was the standard by which to measure people. Nowhere more than at school is the old adage true about "birds of a feather." At recess you would see Allen one of a knot of boys, who were talking intelligently over lessons or matters of improvement, or joining heartily in bracing, manly sports.

Hugh, just as regularly, gravitated towards a very different circle. They were the tricky boys, those who always kept the teacher on the alert, nipping in the bud their plans of mischief, or correcting them for misdemeanors. They get little profit out of their excellent advantages for obtaining an education.

Now, cannot any one easily fancy the future history of those two boys? One sinking lower and lower, led on by evil associates into rounds of dissipation, beginning at the drinking saloon; the other rising to a noble prosperous manhood, to take the responsible position of honor in society.

"He that walketh with wise men shall be wise." A young man's whole furture life depends largely upon the associates he chooses.—Young Peoples Helper.

It is the acknowledged organ of their denomination, and the only channel through which they can receive news peculiarly interesting to them.

THINKING SCHOLARS.

A member of a Sunday school class had found his Saviour. His teacher talking with him about it said:

"How long have you thought of these things?"

"Oh, longer than you thought," he replied. "I always thought about these lessons and carried them in my mind."

"For more than a year I have thought very much, but I did not dare to say anything about it. Don't you remember several months ago I said that I guessed every one had times of feeling a need of the Saviour.

"Yes I remember that well, and since then I have prayed more earnestly for you," said the teacher.

"And I have thought more about it since. I remembered many earnest words you said to me, which I expect you thought I did'nt care anything about. But boys do remember more than teachers think."

"That day I came to your room, I hoped you would talk with me though I made another errand, I wanted you to know how much I was thinking, but I shouldn't have dared to tell you if you hadn't asked me. I'm so glad you did ask me. I wish teachers knew how much some of their scholars think about their lessons. They wouldn't be so easily discouraged."—S. S. Times.

EIGHT REASONS FOR INSURING YOUR LIFE IN THE STAR LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—1. Because it has been established for twenty-six years, a period which is a sufficient test of its stability.

2. Because it has on its Board gentlemen who are known never to lend their influence to an undertaking which is not conducted with the greatest integrity.

3. Because it refers to gentlemen of the greatest eminence in every country, who are ready to vouch for its high position.

4. Because it has put by a large Reserve Fund, $5,000,000, which of itself is more than enough to meet every contingency.

5. Because the Bonuses which have been declared, not withstanding so large a sum has been put by in reserve, are larger than many offices of similar condition.

6. Because its annual income has hitherto been more than three times the amount of claims which are annually provided for.

7. Because it gives Assurers in addition all those advantages which are made the especial features of other offices.

8. Because it has deposited with the Receiver General $100,000 as a guarantee to Canadian Policy-holders, that all claims will be met with promptitude, and in good faith.
