Poetry.

IN SCHOOL DAYS.

Still sits the school house by the road,
A ragged beggar sunning;
Around it still the sumachs grow,
And blackberry vines are running.

Within, the master's desk is seen,
Deep scarred by raps official;
The warping floor, the battered seats,
The jack-knife's carved initial.

The charcoal frescoes on its walls,
Its door's worn sill, betraying
The feet that, creeping slow to school,
Went storming out to playing!

Long years ago a winter sun
Shone over it at setting;
Lit up its western window panes,
And low eaves' icy fretting.

It touched the tangled golden curls,
And brown eyes full of grieving,
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school were leaving.

For near her stood the little boy;
Her childish favor singled;
His cap pulled low upon a face
Where pride and shame were mingled.

Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left he lingered;—
As restlessly her tiny hands
The blue checked apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt
The soft hand's light caressing,
And heard the trembling of her voice,
As if a fault confessing.

"I'm sorry that I spelt the word;
I hate to go above you,
Because"—the brown eyes lower fell—
"Because, you see, I love you!"

Still memory to a grey haired man
That sweet child face is showing.
Dear girl! the grasses on her grave
Have forty years been growing!

He lives to learn, in life's hard school,
How few who pass above him
Lament their triumph and his loss,
Like her—because they love him.

—J. G. Whittier, in Our Young Folks.

Miscellaneous.

A GREAT SERMON BY A LITTLE PREACHER.

"PAPA GOES THERE."

"May'n I go with you, papa?" Please say I may, won't you?

These tones were uttered in a plaintive and sadly entreating tone, the hands of the speaker clasping the knees of the listener.

It was a boy of seven years who lisped them; a beautiful boy, with fair high brow, around which there clustered a glorious wreath of auburn curls; with dark, flashing eyes, cheeks rosy with health, lips like the cherries of summer, and a voice like the birds that taste them. There were tears in those eyes this time, though, and the dimpled mouth was quivering.

It was a man of some thirty-five years who listened to the plea; a man who had been of noble looks and princely bearing. Aye, had been! for the blighted truth was written over his form and face. His locks were matted, his forehead scowling, his eyes red, but not with tears, there were furrows on his cheeks, too, and a brutish look in the expression of his lips. Twice did the little boy address him ere he answered. Then pushing the child rudely from him, he answered, in a stern voice:

"No, no. It's no place for you."

Again those fair, small arms encircled the knees.

"You go, papa. Why can't I go, too? Do let me go."

For a moment the heart of the inebriate seemed to wake from its sleep. He shuddered as he thought of the place his pure-souled boy would enter.

He took the child tenderly in his arms and kissed him as of old; then putting him down, he said kindly:

"You must not ask me again to take you there. It is no place for little boys," and seizing his hat hurried from the room, murmuring to himself as he passed the brilliant way to the bar room. "and no place for men either. Would to God I had never gone."

For a long while Willie stood just where his father had left him, then turning to the few embers that glowed on the hearth he sat down in his little chair, and resting his head upon his mother's lap, said earnestly:

"Mamma, why isn't that pretty store a good place for little boys to go to? Papa loves to go there."

It was a trying question to the poor heart broken woman. She had so far kept from her son the knowledge of his father's sin. She could not bear that he should look with shame upon him, or that his pure and gentle heart should thus commence with so intense a grief. Kindly she toyed with his long ringlets for a while, then she said endearingly:

"Paps knows better than you what is best for his little boy. When you grow older you will know why he does not wish to take you."

Then rising carefully she put down her babe upon its little bed, and tied on her hood and cloak.

"Mind the cradle, now, Willie; I'll be back soon, and then you shall have some supper, and a nice fire to sit by too," and taking a large basket of ironed clothes she went out. A wealthy mother would have been frightened out of leaving so young a boy at nightfall, all alone with an infant to care for, and an open fire to sit beside. But poor Mrs. M. knew well she could trust Willie with his sister, and as for burning up, there were not coals enough to thaw his fingers.

No, she did not fear to leave him, for he had thus been left many a time, and always carefully obeyed her.

And he meant to now; but poor little fellow, his thoughts would wander to that brilliant corner store whither he knew his father always went at evenings, and his brain was busy with eager wonderings. He knew that his father loved to go, and there must be something that he liked, for he never came home again until long after Willie was asleep.

What lay behind those scarlet curtains was a mystery that he sought in vain to unravel.

At length he whispered eagerly, as if to encourage a longing wish, "Paps used to tell me if I wanted to know anything very bad to persevere and find out. Now I do want to know what makes him love to go there so—I know that there must be pretty things behind those windows. I should not wonder"—and his cheeks were glowing,—"if it was like a fairy house. Why can't I go?"

Poor Willie! Temptation to know was too strong to be resisted; so he hunted through the closet for a candle, for he was a thoughtful little fellow, and would not leave his sister to the only danger that could menace her. He found a bit of tallow dip, and lighting it drew the stand close to her, that the flame might scare away the rats and mice should they sally out ere his return.

"I won't stay long, pretty dear," said he, pressing a tender kiss on her sleeping lids and drawing the blankets over her fair arms. "Now, I'll come back soon, but I do want one peep." Swiftly his little feet flew over the pavement, and in a trice he was standing beside the curtained window.

"How light it is, and how they laugh and talk. It must be awful funny in there."

A cold November blast swept round the corner as he spoke, penetrating his thin summer clothes, and causing his flesh to quiver and his teeth to chatter.

"I don't believe they'd hurt me if I'd go in a while, I'm so cold out here," he said, as he pushed the door carefully from him, slipped in and closed it without a breath of noise. For a moment he was bewildered by the light, and finding no one seemed to notice him, he stole toward the glowing grate, and spread his purple palms before the blaze. The group of men that encircled the bar were drinking when he entered. Soon, however, they sat down their glasses and then dispersed about the room.

"Halloo," said one, in a loud tone, as going to the fire he spied little Willie. "What are you doing here, my little fellow? Who are you, and what do you want?"

"I don't want anything, only to see what you do here. My name is Willie M. M. My papa loves to come here, and it looked so pleasant through the window I thought I'd come too. But I must not stay long, for I've left the baby alone."

The man's tones were softened as he spoke again to him.

"And where is your mother my little boy?"

"Oh, she's gone to take home the wash, sir. Papa don't get as much work as he used to once, and we're very poor now, and she has to help him."

"And does it look as pleasant in here as you thought it would?"

"Oh, yes, it does, sir. I don't wonder papa loves to come here so much, it's so cold and dark at home. But I should think he would bring mamma and me and little sis. How she would laugh to see this fire, and all these pretty bottles, and flowers with lights in them. Please sir," said he earnestly, and he seized the rough hands of the listener, "please, sir, tell me why little boys can't come here as well as their fathers?"

"For God's sake don't tell him, Bancroft," said a deep anguished voice. "He deems me pure and holy. Heavens! what a wretch I am! My boy—my boy!" and Willie was clasped in his father's arms—"you have saved me from earth's vilest hell. Here, with my hands upon your sinless brow, I promise never again to touch the cup I've drank so deep. And my brothers in sin, as you value your soul's salvation, tempt me not to break my vow. Heaven help me—help me men so to live, that papa may never blush to take his little boy along—that if papa goes there little Willie may go there too."

Silently the door closed after them and silence dwelt in the saloon behind them. The preacher had been there in cherub form, and crazy, loose, unholy thought, of light and ribald jest was hushed. One by one they stole away, and many a wife wore smiles that night, nor did the old bartender even curse the little one that robbed him of so many dimes. Too deeply in his heart had sunk the voice of that cherub preacher.

"Don't you like me, papa?" asked little Willie, while they stood a few moments on the pavement, for the scene in the barroom was an enigma to the child and he half feared a reproof.

"I was thinking what mamma would like best for supper," said the father.

"Was you—was you?" was the eager question in a gladsome voice. "O, then I know you ain't cross. O, get oysters, and crackers, and tea, papa; and a candle, because there is only a piece. And please, papa, tell mamma not to be cross at me 'cause I left the baby. I don't believe she will, though, because you would not have come yet, and she does love to have you home so much. Oh, I feel just like crying I feel so glad."

"And I feel like crying, too," said his father solemnly; and ere midnight he did cry, and his wife, too, but they were holy tears, washing his heart of the dust that had gathered on its beauty, and hers of the sorrow that had draped it like a pall.

GOUGH'S COLLECTOR.

On one occasion I had an appointment in a small town, in Massachusetts, and, accompanied by a friend, I rode seven miles, and arrived at the church as the people were assembling. Not knowing any one, I approached a plain looking man, and asked if there was to be a lecture there.

"Yaas."

"Who is the lecturer?"

"Gough."

"Can you tell me where I can find the President of the Society?"

"I spect I am the President."

"Ah! My name is Gough."

"Wash, it's most time to go in."

So we went, and I sat in a pew till he came to me, and said, "You'd better go in the desk."

"Is there any one here to offer prayer?" I asked.

"No; the minister's away."

"Is there no deacon?"

"I s spect I'm a deacon."

"Can't you pray?"

"No; I don't speak in meeting."

As I passed into the desk, he stood below, and announced, "Mr. Gough is in the desk, and is goin to lectur."

I "lectur'd" as well as I was able, and had no sooner taken my seat than I heard from below: "We'll now proceed to take up a collection for the benefit of the lecturer."

As no one seemed to move, he passed round with his hat, while the people were going out, and dumping the contents on the table in front of the pulpit, and shaking the lining of his hat, said: "There! that's all for you, and we shan't take nothing out for light."

The amount did not exceed a dollar and a half, principally in cents; some of them the tokens that were then in vogue, and passing as current coin, stamped on one side with a jackass running away with the sub-treasury.

I said, "I don't want it."

"Why, there's a lot of it."

"I don't want it."

"Yer don't?"

"No."

"Wash, then, I'll take it."

And sweeping the coin into his hat, and holding it before him, he dipped his head into it, exclaiming: "Wash, I guess I can carry it."

I said "You've got more cents in your hat than usual."

"Wash, yes; I don't generally carry cents in my hat."

"But some of it is jackass cents."

"Wash, yes; I see there was some bungtowns in the heap.

And without another word he marched off, leaving me to laugh which I did most heartily.—Gough's Autobiography.

Don't "brag," boys. If you have anything of particular value, or can do anything particularly well, be modest about it. A boaster is never loved by his companions; and, generally, the more any one boasts, the less real worth he possesses.

THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.
It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c., cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all confined perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.
If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve them—by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flannels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with PICKSTONE'S Cleansing Crystal.
Sold by most respectable Grocers and Chemists, in Packets Three Cents each, sufficient for 20 Gallons of water, or Twelve for Thirty Cents, also in Boxes containing 144 Packets, price Three Dollars cash. ☞ Be sure to ask for PICKSTONE'S Washing Crystal, as there are spurious imitations. Do not condemn it untried. Make one trial! PROTECTED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.
