SOUL COMMUNION.

BY FRANCIS EASTWOOD.

The night comes softly down, my soul,
The night comes gently down:
The quiet, thoughtful stars will hush
The murmur of the town;
Come, let us be alone my soul,
In the still night alone,
And tell me truly, O my soul,
What thou this day hast done.

I had some shining gold to use;
I toiled.—nor toiled in vain,
For where I scattered one at morn,
At eve I gathered twain.

Was that thy long day's work, my soul?
O foolish soul! Ere morn
The thief may take thy treasured hoard,
And thou be left forlorn.
Or if the Lord should call, my soul,
This very night! oh, say,
What of thy treasure then, my soul?
Was this thy work to-day?

I sought for knowledge and have found,
Tracked great men's thoughts afar,
Searched out a riddle of the earth,
The secret of a star!

Is that thy long day's work, my soul?
O foolish soul! We know
That earthly wisdom counteth naught
Where thou and I must go,—
May go this very night, my soul;
What of thy wisdom then?
Was this thy long day's work, my soul,
In the wide world of men?

I thought,—and sent forth to the world
A noble thought: I wait
For its sure coming meed of praise,
When men shall call me great!

Was this thy long day's work, my soul?
O foolish soul! thou knowest
How little earthly fame will count
In that world where thou goest.
O child of Immortality!
Thy crown should be of hay
Not woven by an earthly hand,
Was this thy work to-day?

While walking in the crowded street
I met a weeping child;
I know not what the words I said,
But as he passed he smiled.

That was a work of joy, my soul,
O happy soul! That deed
Will rank the giving water to
The thirsty one in need,
And when the Angel of the Book,
Writeth of this, he'll say,
"'Twas for the living Master's sake
This deed was done to-day."

I found a man who sought for peace,
Yet nothing him sufficed;
I led him to the Cross's foot,
And showed him Jesus Christ.

Is this thy good day's work, my soul?
O blessed soul! Thy crown
Hath one more jewel! Now, my soul,
In peace we'll lay us down;
In joy and peace and faith and love
The long day's work is done.
New work, new strength, the Master gives
With the new rising sun.

Miscellaneous.

THE SINGULAR CAPTIVE.

"What is it?" asked Nannie as Uncle Allan handed her the microscope that she might look at the imprisoned objects.

"A fly."

"A fly! I thought it was an elephant. And these creatures get on us!"

Uncle Allan was amused. "Isn't it beautiful?" he said. "See what a smooth, coffee-colored satin head-dress it has, with a black stripe in the centre, and two light golden streaks on each side, and black-and-golden feather-tufts sticking up?"

"That is true," said Nannie, holding the glass so that she could get a better view; "and the wings are like the colors of the humming-bird as the sun shines upon them; and the back is brown and black, with tiny gold and silver beads all over it, and little black feathers between; and the body is striped round and round,—white and gold and black. I would not have believed a fly so wonderful and brilliant."

"Our poor sight is so finite!" said Uncle Allan. "The microscope brings out mysteries. Only think what our perfect power must reveal, when through God's grace, we shall reach the sinless world! I love to look forward to an eternity of research into the glorious things of God's creation."

Nannie kept her eye at the glass, and discovered new marvels.

"What a little slender neck the creature has!" she said; "and how easily he moves his head about! it seems to be on a pivot. Are those streaks of light upon the top of his head, eyes, uncle?"

"Yes; the greater portion of the head is occupied by the eyes, especially in the male fly. There is a proboscis under the head."

"That sounds elephant-like," said Nannie.

"It is like the elephant's in one respect; being the sole means by which the fly provides itself with food. The fly's proboscis is a long channel, ending in two fleshy lips, inclosing on its upper side several fine bristles as sharp as needles.

"These needles are the weapons with which the insect punctures our skin; and then he pours into the wound his poisonous saliva, that brings to us painful itchings and smartings."

"That proboscis is a good thing to thrust into the molasses cup;" said Nannie, "or into other liquids. But how does the fly eat hard sugar, I wonder?"

"He hasn't any teeth, to be sure," replied her uncle; but he dissolves the sugar by means of a fluid, that passes down the same pipe, which afterwards returns the sweet, melted into syrup."

"Six legs," said Nannie, returning to her microscope; "I can scarcely see, he keeps them in such perpetual motion. There are two little claws on each foot, and two or three little hair-cushions, or pads, spreading out so as to form little cups."

"Some naturalists say it is by means of these cups, or suckers, that the fly is able to walk upon the ceiling with his back downwards, and also up the side of perpendicular surfaces," said Uncle Allan; "others think there is a glutinous substance that the creature can press out under his feet at pleasure; and some say he holds by fine hair brushes, that he uses as supporters. The theory of the suckers is generally believed. There are two just under the root of the claw. The edges are toothed, like a saw; and the surface is hollowed and rough with little points."

"How gazy the wings are!" said Nannie. "There are two pairs, tiny ones, just behind the joints of the large ones; and behind these 'wringlets' two short [illegible]

"'Poisers,' or 'balancers,'" said Uncle Allan.

"What a curious creature it is!" said Nannie. "The more I look at it, the more it puzzles me. So beautiful and yet it springs from filth, and loves corruption; for it feeds on putrid things as well as upon the good food that we eat."

"Yes, yes," said her uncle. "And I was thinking the other day, as I rode in a street-car, and saw some flies upon the soiled bare feet of a boy opposite me, how strange the freedom of these common, low-bred insects!

'From the beggar's toes
To the monarch's nose,'

came into my mind as an impromptu couplet."

"O uncle, you are too bad!" said Nannie. "That isn't half as pretty as Theodore Tilton's "Baby Bye." I don't wonder he thought this beautiful creature worthy a poem."

"It is a poem in itself, with its rainbow hues, and its veined wings, which the air fills, and lifts from earth, and upon the edges of which Æolus strikes, and makes a humming music," said Uncle Allan. "I look at the tiny, turnip-shaped eggs, and wonder what can come of such diminutive things. Then I see the larvæ, or maggots, wingless and legless, to help rid the earth of things offensive; and then the pupæ, in their mummy cases; and the perfect flies buzzing in the summer sun; and my heart and voice cry out, 'O all ye the works of the Lord! bless ye the Lord; praise him and magnify him for ever.'"

"Tell me more, Uncle Allan, please."

"Some other time, daughter, we will think of the various branches of this family—'Dipters,' or 'two-winged;' two pairs of wings, that is."—Christian Banner.

MINDING.

"Charley, come in—I want you," said a sweet womanly voice to a little boy who was playing marbles on the sidewalk in front of a nice brick house.

Now, Charley was very busy, and in the midst of a delightful game. He was as happy as could be. To quit his play then was like quitting the table half through dinner. Would he obey? We looked with interest to see what he would do. What would you have done?

Charley replied, "Yes, mother"—and picking up his marbles, started off with a smiling face and a bounding step up the side yard, and in at the end door of the house. A fine boy that, I thought, as I looked after him, I wonder who he is? What a beautiful thing it must be to have a little boy or girl that will mind at once, and with a happy, loving heart! I wondered what would become of that boy, and wished to see more of him, and learn his history.

I used to walk past that house every week, and always thought of that blue-eyed, light-haired boy. The thought of him made me happy. I saw a great many naughty children. Once I spent two or three days in trying to find a naughty boy who ran away from his home, and overwhelmed his parents with grief; and when I found him, some one had stolen his coat and hat, and bundle of clothes, and all the money he had. Once I chased after a truant boy and girl for several hours, and at last, late at night, found them in the woods, wet through, cold, and frightened almost to death. They had disobeyed their mother, and gone to play, instead of going to school, and both of them were sick for several weeks in consequence of their folly and exposure. A boy that minds—he is a jewel.

I had been in business a year or two, and in that time had several boys; but it was next to impossible to find one that would mind. At last, I was quite out of patience, and I determined that I would have no one who could not bring the best recommendation, and stand the closest test. Several applied for the place, but no one suited us. At last came a blue-eyed, flaxen-haired youth of twelve years, with a bright, honest face. There was something engaging in his aspect. Had I seen him before? "What is your name?"

"Charlie Warren, sir. I live in Franklin street. My father is a carpenter, but is lame now, and cannot work, and I have got mother's consent to go into a store, if I can find a place."

It was the very Charlie whom I had seen playing at marbles. I remembered the circumstance, and knew he would mind. I did not need a recommendation for him, but gave him the place, and twice as much pay as I had proposed to give.

Charlie came to work on Monday morning. It seemed hard for him the first week of work, but he behaved like a man. The boys in the next store came in and made his acquaintance. One morning I heard two of them trying to persuade Charlie to go off with them down on the wharves in the forenoon, and see a boat-race that was to come off. "No," said Charlie, "mother told me to mind my business, and I am paid for staying here, and don't think it right to go off without my employer's knowing it."

That was a brave word, and I thought more of Charlie than ever.

That was ten years ago. He has been with me ever since, and proved to be the best clerk I ever had. Yesterday we put up a new sign, and on it in large gilt letters, was Charlie's full name. The store is his own. He is now a prosperous promising young man, and if he lives, will be a rich honored man. And all this because one bright morning he minded his mother when she called him. From such little things do great results come. Always mind, and it will be always well with you.—Ladies' Repository.

THE BRIGHT SIDE OUT.

Far away in the gloomy prison of Andersonville, a little drummer-boy was dying. The matted, brown hair was pushed back from the white brow, and in his wasted, haggard features, his fond mother, if she had seen him, would scarcely have recognized the handsome, merry-hearted boy, who, a short time before, made pleasant sunshine in her widowed home.

Manly and patiently had he battled with the hardships of his prison life, never complaining and never despairing, but hunger and exposure of every kind had done their work too well, and therefore he could not escape terrible sufferings. But our kind Heavenly Father, who never leaves us here to suffer more than is for our good, sent a gentle messenger, the angel of mercy, to bear his brave spirit to "his house of many mansions."

The blue eyes unclosed, the pale lips moved, and the comrade bent his head to catch his dying words.

"Put the bright side out to mother," he said; and one more prisoner was free.

The faithful comrade bowed his head and wept, and said, bitterly, to himself, "Alas! what side in this terrible prison life is bright?"

Beyond the gloomy stockade, the drummer-boy was laid to rest, and the life of his comrade was spared to tell the sad story to the lonely mother.

Do you not think, in that hour of terrible trial that it was a great joy to the mother to know that her son was brave, and patient, and true? and that, amid all his sufferings, he remembered her, and wished to spare her all possible pain?—Little Corporal.

THE NATIONAL
Life Insurance Company
OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

WAS Chartered by Congress, in 1868, with a capital of ONE MILLION DOLLARS, every dollar of which was paid in before commencing business.

This capital is four times as large as that of any American Company doing a Life Insurance business exclusively. Beside this immense capital, the Company have invested a premium reserve to meet maturing Policies of seven hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars, making their total assets to January 1st, 1871, one million seven hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars. Their liabilities to same date were $707,329, or in other words, they have more than two dollars assets for every dollar of liabilities. This success is owing to the facts that their business is conducted upon the only common sense plan—"so much insurance for so much money"—and that the Company's financial management has been economical and cautious.

In this Company there are none of the bewildering uncertainties and disappointments of "notes," "dividends," &c., &c., &c., which enter so largely into the business plans of Mutual Companies. The insured buy what they pay for—Insurance. They are not called upon to insure others, but they are insured by the Company.

Instead of charging thirty per cent. more than is necessary to cover possible losses, the National charges the net cost of Insurance and risks its capital to cover any extra mortality. Mutual Companies MAY not need to use this extra thirty per cent.; in that case it is returned to the Policy-holder and misnamed a "Dividend." The National does not need any extra guarantee, its capital being sufficient, and consequently its rates are from 25 to 30 per cent. lower than those of Mutual Companies.

The National's Policies are more liberal than any issued in the Provinces, allowing residence or travel anywhere in temperate climates. No extra Premiums, Policy-fees, Permits, or extra charges, except upon the half-dozen occupations generally recognized as EXTRA hazardous.

The National is the only Company which has made the required deposit at Ottawa for the SOLE benefit of Canadian Policy-holders. All others are for "POLICY-HOLDERS GENERALLY."

Five cents per day will insure a young man a thousand dollars, IN GOLD, payable to him at the age of sixty, or to his representatives should he die sooner. Four cents a day will insure a man, aged 25, for one thousand dollars, payable to his wife or children at his death, wherever that may occur. What easier way is there to make such a provision? Is it not worth your while to investigate?

Agencies are established throughout the Lower Provinces where the fullest information will be cheerfully given. Should there be none to whom you can conveniently apply, a note addressed to the General Agent at St. John, will be promptly answered. Address

JOHN C. RISTEEN,
P. O. Box 428,
Saint John, N. B.

References in regard to the Company's standing will, upon application, be given to prominent men in all parts of the Lower Provinces. [mar 3.

CARR'S PATENT CANT DOG.

THE advantages of CARR'S PATENT are—
1st. Simplicity and Utility combined. The bolt and nut, which are often working loose, being entirely dispensed with.
2nd. The Connection being low, the Dog never fails catching the dog.
3rd. The width of the band gives additional strength to the Stock.
4th. It is the most Durable and Cheapest Dog now in use.
The subscriber having purchased the Patent Right of the above Cant Dog from James Carr, begs to inform all Lumbermen, Mill Owners and Wharf Builders, that he will have a Stock manufactured and will be able to supply any quantity after the middle of February. A sample may be seen at Subscriber's Store, and orders received so as to ensure an early delivery. Lumbermen, before fitting out, will please call and examine this Dog, as it will save them both in expense and labor. W. H. THORNE.

SPEIGHT'S
PATENT DESIDERATUM GLUE POT.

IT has hitherto been found in using any of the Domestic Glue Pots now before the public, that they have generally caused disappointment, for the Glue as soon as sufficiently heated, as speedily becomes chilled, owing to the cooling of the small quantity of water which can be used in melting the Glue. This inconvenience is avoided in the use of "SPEIGHT'S PATENT DESIDERATUM GLUE POT," where the Family Night Light not only dissolves the Glue, but will keep it in a hot and liquid state for several hours, and the necessity and manifest inconvenience is therefore obviated of having to place the Glue Pot on the bars of a hot grate or over a gas jet, as has been usually recommended, and is absolutely necessary in the use of any other Glue Pot. Another great improvement is the inner cup of porcelain which can be at any time removed for cleaning, and will be found equally useful for dissolving Gum, Isinglass, Gelatine, or any other adhesive agent.

The advantage of having a Glue Pot, the separate parts of which can be removed and cleaned, and when necessary renewed, is sufficient alone to recommend the article to public use, and altogether will be found of a character immensely superior to any other of the Domestic Glue Pots hitherto supplied, and will be admitted as a DESIDERATUM IN EVERY HOUSEHOLD SHOP, OR COUNTING HOUSE.
