Poetry.

COMFORT IN BEREAVEMENT.

We greet the morn with gladness, and we think
not, as we smile,
Of the Lord above, who sendeth all the blessings of our life;
But when the shadows darken and our hands are
sore with toil,
We are never slow to murmur at its sorrows and its strife.

Do we know when we are happy, when the light
is on our path.
When God's kindness is around us and His gifts
are in our hand?
Or do we need the darkness, the shadow of His wrath.
To remind us that our bliss and woe are sent at
His command

God help us! we are weak. In his wisdom is our strength:
If we saw behind the darkness, we would bless
Him for it still,
Knowing well that what we suffer in the present
time, at length
Is the destined fiery witness of his soul-preserving will.

Had he made the earth our homestead. He would
ne'er have sent us grief,
But He sends it now to wean us to the joys that
are to be,
Where in mansions never-failing He will give our souls relief—
In mansions where the songs of Heaven will drown earth's misery.

What though in grief we grope a while for forms
that we have loved,
What though we miss the voices that were music
to our ears,
'Twas God's sweet care for us and them that lovingly removed
Their presence from the scenes of earth to brighter, happier spheres.

Christ died that we might live: through the gate
of death we go
To meet him and the blessed ones who in His presence stand;
Oh! the joy of seeing once again the faces that we know,—
Of finding our loved lost ones in the glorious Angel Land!

There is light that never darkens, there is music
without jar,
There is meeting without parting through a blest
eternity,
There is peace past understanding, there is joy that
naught can mar,
And earth's strife is lost forever in love's perfect
shining sea.

Miscellaneous.

THE TOWER OF LONDON.

The historic interest of the great English metropolis centers about a few most memorable buildings and places, of which no single one surpasses in its wealth of associations—strange and sad alike!—the tower of London. If any reader is unfamiliar with this structure, as portrayed in photograph or engraving, the name may give him, very naturally, a conception of its aspect. It is not a tower in the common meaning of the world. It is conspicuous, indeed, in a panorama of the city, from the elevated ground on which it stands, But its breadth, rather than its height, fills the observant eye. It is a cluster of all sorts of structures, and, in the days gone by, has been palace, prison and fortress, all in one. Now it comprises dwellings, offices, armories, show-chambers, chapels, ware-houses and barracks—and these, within the outer walls of the inclosure—cover twelve acres of ground—within which one is as lost to London, to its outside din and rattle and dust, as if it were fifty miles, instead of an arrow's flight only, distant. Its narrow streets and stone-paved courts, its old walls crowned with ivy-wreaths, its curiously-robed wardens moving about with the groups of hushed visitors, all help to impress one with a feeling very unlike that with which he had just before traversed the densely crowded thoroughfares of the city. He is carried back,—back to the very cradle of English life and history. He is upon the site of the fortress which the conquering Norman built to hold in the thrall of fear the people he had subdued with force. This was eight hundred years ago; and through these eight centuries how vast, how grand has been the procession of the events that make up the story of the Tower, and of England! The interest of the place centers in the "White Tower," as it is called, the Conqueror's stronghold, which seems to-day as massive and unfaltering in its strength as if it were just built. Other monarchs added to the rugged William's work, and so the place waxed large and mightier, till Peace, having spread her beneficent wings over the great nation and the red crimes of lust and ambition—which made the tower once a terror and a shame—having passed into history as a phenomena impossible of repetition in the new era of civilized and Christianized society, the necessity and special functions of the great stronghold declined; and now it is only a place of memories, a memorial of royal power and passions, of physical force, contrasting marvellously with the splendid trophies of intellectual and moral forces aggregated around it in modern London.

THE WHITE TOWER.

The White Tower is one of the most remarkable buildings in the world. Its exterior is imposing, in the midst of the modern magnificence which seems to mock its antiquity. Its walls are sixteen feet thick, and there seems indeed to be stone enough within the Tower limits to build a modern city. From its deep vaults to its great leaden roof, it is the embodiment of massive strength. Its great halls—the banquet-room, and the council chamber of early English history—are now repositories of arms and war stores. A large portion of the Tower is given up to the display of old armor. Effigies of kings and knights on horseback and on foot, clad in the cumbrous and costly steel and gilded armor of successive periods, are ranged along "Queen Elizabeth's Armory," and other halls of the building. Quite apart from any interest one may have in these historic, though barbaric, links in the great chain of English story, the exhibition is a most curious one, and, in some aspects, almost grotesque, especially when the extreme dilipidation of some royal effigy suggests the idea that it had better be sent to some skilful artisan, or even to some tailor, to be rehabilitated. Some of the grand heroes of the English battle-fields cut but a sorry figure as they are now arrayed and panoplied in the Tower.

The decorations of the halls, corridors, stairways and ceilings of the White Tower are among the most attractive features of the grand old place. They are all wrought out of weapons and parts of weapons. With swords, blades and hilts and handles; with bayonets and musket barrels; with sabres and spears; with shields and morions; with maces and axes; with daggers and pistols; with these—and almost innumerable other weapons and parts of weapons—ingenious and most patient hands have wrought imitations of frescoes, centerpieces, cornices, pictures and other effects—which must be seen to be at all appreciated for their variety and beauty of design.

Such fanciful groupings—such floral and artistic transformations of deadly arms into emblems and emblazonries of life and art—are, perhaps, nowhere else to be found. These ornamental achievements quite divide and share the visitor's admiration with the innumerable trophies of British victories won in Europe and in Asia; and no less with the glittering splendor of the regalia—the Crown jewels—which are displayed with perhaps a judicious, but seemingly needless vigilance on the part of the guardian.

THE TOWER AS A PRISON.

The annals of the tower as a state prison are extended and gloomy, and too voluminous for anything beyond a simple allusion here. Through its great Thames archway—known as the Traitor's Gate—grandeur and loyalty have passed to exchange splendor and court delights and dreams of glory for dungeons and torture and death! The visitor stands reverently over the dust of illustrious captives who sighed out their lives within the Tower walls.

During five dynasties—the Norman and early Plantagenet age; the fourteenth century, under the Edwards; the fifteenth century, succeeding with national tempest and gloom the splendor of the preceding era; the Tudor dynasty; and, finally the period of the Stuarts; during all these,—embracing not fewer than six hundred and fifty years, the Tower was a prison as well as a palace and a fortress, with here and there incidents of wrong and cruelty and tyranny at which the heart of humanity involuntary shudders to-day. I stood within its dungeons and dark chambers, and upon its unhallowed gallows-ground, with a profounder consciousness of the dread terrors of the past than I supposed myself capable of realizing in the midst of an age and a history so utterly antipodal to that which the Tower commemorates. With an almost intense feeling of relief I gave the obliging warden his little tribute of silver, and passed out of the solemn precinct into the profaner, perhaps, but freer air of the busy city, where not a thought of the murdered princess, or of the unhappy Anna Boleyn, checked the restless tide of every-day and most common life!—Correspondence of Chicago Tribune.

SOCIAL WINE-DRINKING—A CRUSHING RETORT.

At an ecclesiastical meeting wine-drinking came under discussion. Some favored it—some condemned. At length an influential member made a vehement speech in its favor, denouncing opposers as fanatics. When he had ended, a layman asked permission to speak. "Moderator," said he, "it is not my purpose to reply to all that you have heard. My object is humble and practical. I know a father, who was at pains and sacrifices to educate a son at college. There he become dissipated; but, after he returned to his home, its genial influences, acting upon a generous nature, reformed him. I need not tell you that that father rejoiced.

"Well, years passed. The young man completed his professional studies, and was about to leave home to enter upon his life-work, when, in an evil hour, he was invited to dine with a neighboring clergyman noted for his hospitality. At dinner, wine was introduced—was offered to that young man—was refused; was offered again, again refused. He was laughed at for his singularity. He could withstand appetite—ridicule he could not; drank—he fell. From that time he became a drunkard, and long since has gone to a drunkard's grave!

"Moderator," continued the old man, with streaming eyes, "I am that father; and he who just addressed you—it was he that ruined that son!"—American Messenger.

TALKING TO CHILDREN.

A LITTLE girl, a few years old, had been to a missionary meeting. A travelling minister, who chanced to be present, had made one of the addresses, in which he attempted to tell the children that they had a "battle to fight." His authority had been the sixth chapter of Ephesians, commencing: "Children, obey your parents." Free use had been made of the apostle's description of the Christian "warfare" and "armor," and he closed by exhorting the children to "read over and over this sixth chapter."

The little girl had been to the meeting, and returned to her mother deeply impressed, as was supposed, with the important lessons taught; whereupon the following dialogue ensued:

Child.—"Mamma, we must read over and over and over the sixth chapter."

Mother.—"The sixth chapter of what?"

The child was quite baffled by a question she could not answer.

"But what does it tell about?" asked the mother.

"Oh! it tells about fighting," replied the child.

"About fighting! Who were fighting?"

"I don't know, but I guess it was the Americans; and it commences, 'Parents, obey your children.'"

The pastor since learning the facts has been musing much over the probable impressions made upon children's minds by the learned addresses they often hear. He concludes that the art of talking to children is not yet perfected, and that some persons make wretched work when they attempt to practice it.—Evangelist.

"THE MOUTHS OF BABES."—The following incident, reported in the Congregationalist, occurred recently in a village where a revival was in progress:

"The pastor, at a prayer-meeting, requested all who were Christians to go into a room by themselves, while those interested in religion, but not professing it, were desired to remain for a season. One by one they offered up short, fervent petitions, for the forgiveness of their sins and for aid to live a life of holiness. It was a solemn time, and it seemed as if each one present must, for himself, offer a prayer. At last a little boy of six years, with clasped hands, fervently repeated the Lord's Prayer, and was followed immediately by his sister of three years with 'Now I lay me down to sleep.' When these babes in Christ, in the simplicity of childhood, had uttered their petitions, the room was hushed, as if an angel's voice had been heard, and not a soul remained unmoved, all feeling that they were at the door of heaven."

HOW TO ADDRESS CHILDREN.—The secret of addressing children well is to help them to think up toward your level, instead of walking down to their level. As to language, I doubt whether a minister ought ever to use a word in any of his sermons which an average lad of twelve years cannot understand. The great Teacher never uses a big word.—Theodore Cuyler

CAUTION!! CAUTION!!!
TO THE PUBLIC OF THE BRITISH PROVINCES OF NORTH AMERICA.
I beg most respectfully to acquaint the public of the British North American Provinces, that in May, 1871, I caused the business at 80, Maiden Lane, New York, for the sale of HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT, which were, up to that time, prepared by William Brown, now deceased, to be closed. I regret to say that I have reason to know that the management of the late business had for some years, and in many ways, been most corrupt; and it may be that the Pills and Ointment were not prepared with that care I have always desired.
Those who do not wish to be deceived by buying spurious medicines, which are now likely to emanate from the States or elsewhere, but to possess themselves of the genuine HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT, manufactured by me in London, England, will do well to see that each pot and box bears the British Government stamp, on which is engraved the words "HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT," and that the address on the label is 533, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, where only they are manufactured, and in no other part of the world. The retail prices are on the labels in British currency, and not in dollars and cents.
No representative of mine will ever travel through any part of the British Provinces, or the United States, either to sell, or to take orders for my Pills and Ointment; and as I have reason to believe that attempts will very probably be made to deceive the public in this way by persons calling upon medicine vendors, falsely representing that they are acting for me, and with my knowledge and consent, I deem it advisable to put the public on their guard against any such deceptions.
I most earnestly entreat all those who may read this advertisement, that they be pleased, in the public interest, to communicate the purport of the same to their friends, that they may not be defrauded of their money by purchasing perhaps worthless imitations of the genuine HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.
I would ask, as a great favor, that should it come to the knowledge of any person that spurious medicines are being made or sold in my name, he be pleased to send me all the particulars he can collect respecting the same, that is to say, the name and address of the vendor who is selling the spurious medicines, and likewise the name and address of the House in the United States, or elsewhere, which may have supplied them, so as to enable me, for the protection of the public, to institute proceedings against such evil-doers, and I engage to remunerate very handsomely any person who may give me such information, the information's name never being divulged.
Should any person have reason to believe that he has been deceived by buying spurious imitations, of these Medicines, he will do well to send me, in a letter, to the address at foot (which he can do at a cost of six cents in postage), one of the books of instructions which are affixed to the same. I promise to examine it and send a reply, stating whether the Medicines are genuine or not, so that if spurious he may apply to the person from whom he purchased them to have his money returned.
Chemists and Druggists who desire to obtain the Medicines can be supplied at the lowest wholesale prices in quantities of not less than £20 worth—viz., 8s. 6d., 22s. and 34s. per dozen boxes of Pills or pots of Ointment, nett, without discount, for which remittance must be sent in advance.
I have the honor to be,
With great respect,
THOMAS HOLLOWAY.

THE NATIONAL
Life Insurance Company
OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
WAS Chartered by Congress, in 1868, with a capital of ONE MILLION DOLLARS, every dollar of which was paid in before commencing business.
This capital is four times as large as that of any American Company doing a Life Insurance business exclusively. Beside this immense capital, the Company have invested a premium reserve to meet maturing Policies of seven hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars, making their total assets to January 1st, 1871, one million seven hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars. Their liabilities to same date were $807,339, or in other words, they have more than two dollars assets for every dollar of liabilities. This success is owing to the facts that their business is conducted upon the only common sense plan—"so much insurance for so much money"—and that the Company's financial management has been economical and cautious.
In this Company there are none of the bewildering uncertainties and disappointments of "Premiums, Dividends," &c., &c., which enter so largely into the business plans of Mutual Companies. The insured buy what they pay for—Insurance. They are not called upon to insure others, but they are insured by the Company.
Instead of charging thirty per cent. more than is necessary to cover possible losses, the National charges the net cost of Insurance and risks its capital to cover any extra mortality. Mutual Companies MAY not need to use this extra thirty per cent.; in that case it is returned to the Policy-holder and mis-called a "Dividend." The National does not need any extra guarantee, its capital being sufficient, and consequently its rates are from 25 to 30 per cent. lower than those of Mutual Companies.
The National's Policies are more liberal than any issued in the Provinces, allowing residence or travel anywhere in temperate climates. No extra Premiums, Policy-fees, Permits, or extra charges, except upon the half-dozen occupations generally recognized as EXTRA hazardous.
The National is the only Company which has made the required deposit at Ottawa for the SOLE benefit of Canadian Policy-holders. All others are for "POLICY-HOLDERS GENERALLY."
Five cents per day will insure a young man a thousand dollars, IN GOLD, payable to him at the age of sixty, or to his representatives should he die sooner. Four cents a day will insure a man, aged 25, for one thousand dollars, payable to his wife or children at his death, wherever that may occur. What easier way is there to make such a provision? Is it not worth your while to investigate?
Agencies are established throughout the Lower Provinces where the fullest information will be cheerfully given. Should there be none to whom you can conveniently apply, a note addressed to the General Agent at St. John, will be promptly answered. Address
JOHN C. RISTEEN,
P. O. Box 428,
Saint John, N. B.
References in regard to the Company's standing will, upon application, be given to prominent men in all parts of the Lower Provinces. [mar 3.
