THE DAISY.

In the early spring-time,
When the violets grow,
When the birds sing sweetly,
And the soft winds blow,
Comes the little daisy,
Blooming fresh and fair,
Springing bright and joyous
From the mountain lair.

Sunny little blossoms
On their slender stalk,
How much they would teach us,
If they could but talk;
Ever looking upward
All the livelong day,
Their bright faces turning
To catch each sunbeam's ray.

And then at night so meekly
Bending their modest head,
With gems of silvery dew
On their pink-tinged petal spread:
How they seem to whisper
To the sad and lone,
"Have faith and hope and courage;
Look upward, weary one.

"And when dark days of sorrow
Are sent thee from above,
Bend gently, patient to Him
Who chastens but in love;
Though many days of grief
And trial be thy lot,
Look upward from the scene of care;
Thy God hath not forgot."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE CONTRAST.

"The hope of the righteous shall be gladness; but the expectation of the wicked shall perish."

Lizzie, who both in character and person resembled her grandmother, inherited her exquisite taste for music, so that after hearing a tune sung through a few times she could imitate it with accuracy. One afternoon, she, with her mother, was visiting Mrs. Lang, when the lady played for her amusement a number of simple songs. The child was in raptures, and grew really pale from the excitement. Mrs. Lang then seated her at the piano, and was equally delighted and surprised to see how quickly she distinguished the chords, and refrained from those sounds which grated upon her sensitive ear.

Mr. Appleton came for his wife in the evening, and the lady at once began to remark upon the musical talent of his daughter.

"It shall be cultivated," was his quiet reply, "even if I have to postpone finishing my house for another year."

Mrs. Appleton readily consented to submit to some inconveniences, though she confessed they were rather straitened for room, for the sake of procuring suitable advantages for their child. As an immediate consequence of this visit, the gentleman went the next day to the city, and engaged the services of a distinguished pianist to select him a good instrument, to which the little Miss was speedily introduced by her new teacher.

The expenses consequent upon this arrangement really required considerable sacrifice on the part of the parents. They had now three children, and needed more chambers. Then the young architect naturally felt a strong desire to see his house correspond with the grounds which were every year becoming more beautiful. In front the smoothly-shaven lawn sloped gradually down to the street, protected by a high bank-wall of split granite. Clusters of trees were set out here and there where they would not interfere with the prospect from the house, and the avenues which wound up from side gates to the front entrance were thickly shaded with a variety of ornamental trees. Back of the house was the kitchen garden, and a small nursery of well selected fruit trees just coming into a bearing condition.

Within a year his business had required him to own a horse, and he had therefore been obliged to put up a barn, which was in a style of architecture similar to his house when the original plan was carried out.

On a few occasions he had been slightly annoyed by hearing a remark of this kind: "Mr. Appleton seems to think more of his animals than of his family. At any rate he has put up for them a far more tasteful building." Perhaps unconsciously to himself such remarks had quickened his desire to complete his original plan for his dwelling, having so far lived in what would be the back wing or L. The lumber was already in a state of preparation, the whole cost estimated, when the sudden desire to give his little daughter every advantage of education, caused still farther delay in his long-cherished plans.

The rapid progress of Lizzie, however, and the immense delight which her music afforded her, soon repaid her parents for the sacrifice they had made for her good; but from the remarks of Mrs. Stearns we shall see that their motives were not appreciated by all their neighbours.

Mr. Stearns returned home to tea one evening, and found the parlor, so seldom occupied, brilliantly lighted on account of the unexpected arrival of a friend. As they sat together at the richly-spread board, from which, however, the children were excluded, Mrs. Stearns exclaimed—

"By the way, husband, did you know that Mr. Appleton had purchased an elegant piano for Lizzie? Mrs. Molton heard he gave three hundred and fifty dollars; but I don't credit a word of it. I don't believe even he, strange as he is in the management of his affairs, would be guilty of such extravagance."

"She fell short of the truth by fifty dollars," said Mr. Stearns, quietly. "I was passing just as they were taking it from the cars to his place, and Henry asked me to assist in carrying it into the house."

"Well, what did he say for himself?" asked the lady, biting her lips with vexation.

"Nothing, except when I remarked it was an elegant instrument, he said that he was sorry the case was so costly, but that the gentleman who selected it said the tone was uncommonly fine, and then added that it was four hundred dollars."

"How absurd for him to have a piano costing so much in that small, common-looking house! It will make their furniture look worse than ever. But I suppose they think it will make Lizzie a lady, like Mrs. Lang's daughter. It makes me really sick to see how hard some people try to imitate the rich folks."

It rose to Gilbert's lips to say, that the day before she had blamed Henry that he dared to associate with wealthy people while he was mean enough to live in such a poor house; but he was trying to keep peace, and he therefore refrained from anything that would irritate her. Ever since he left Mr. Appleton's house on the night when he felt so distressed about his soul, he had been endeavoring to work out his own salvation by submitting to the taunts and unkindness of his wife without allowing himself to be made either passionate or sulky by them. This he considered a great triumph over himself, and began really to feel that he was living the life of a Christian. But as he did this in his own strength, without seeking the aid of God, he soon found his righteousness stripped from him like filthy rags.

One day, soon after the conversation at the tea-table, he asked his wife to dress up Francis, as he had been invited to tea at Mr. Appleton's, and he would carry him when he went to his work.

"Not with my consent," was the angry reply.

"Why not?" he asked, determined to keep cool.

"Because, if you must know it, I don't approve of their way of bringing up their children: setting them up to be ladies and gentlemen, when they are no better than other folks; and then Mrs. Appleton has grown so proud she scarcely speaks when I meet her in the street, and she hasn't called here, to my certain knowledge, since the year Francis was born. He shan't go there to be set against his mother, and have his head filled with their Methodist notions; and you may tell them so, if you please!"

"I shall tell them no such thing," answered Gilbert, beginning to lose his self-control. "I agreed that the child should go, and I shall carry him; so if you don't mean to dress him, I'll take him as he is."

And he drew the trembling boy to his arms.

"Do it, if you dare!" screamed the angry woman; "but I tell you now, it will be worse for you and worse for him."

"I'll see to that," said Mr. Stearns.

Then rising with the boy in his arms, he went with him to the chamber. When they returned the child had on his best coat and cap; and merely saying, "you see I have done without your assistance," he left his incensed wife to get rid of her anger as best she might.

"Oh, dear!" he cried, as he walked along, "she's enough to tempt the devil himself. I knew 'twas no use trying to be a Christian, and from this time I give up."

"I'm afraid to go home, for fear ma will beat me," said Francis, beginning to cry.

"Hush up, child! I'll see to that."

At the same time he was sure his action would not pass unrevenged even upon the innocent boy.

The afternoon passed far too quickly to poor little Francis, who seemed to himself to be in a new world. There was nothing but kindness shown him, and his grateful heart swelled almost to bursting. There was love enough in the mother's smile for him to have a share; and Lizzie, who was within a few months of his age, devoted herself to amusing him.

But as it grew dark, and he realized that it was nearly time to go home, he began to cry most bitterly.

"Why, Francis, what is the matter?" cried Susy, in alarm.

Lizzie, too, tried to comfort and soothe her little friend, but his sobs grew louder than ever. Mr. Appleton took him upon his knee and tried to ascertain the cause of this sudden grief, and at last the child sobbed out—

"I don't want to go home, 'cause ma will beat me awfully. I know she will, 'cause she hates pa so."

Henry pressed the little boy closer in his arms as he glanced with a look of horror at his wife.

"Pa says she shan't; but I know she will," continued the frightened child. I want to stay with you."

"O, mamma, do let him stay!" cried Lizzie, her eyes heavy with tears at this unusual scene.

Mrs. Appleton sighed as she shook her head, for just at that moment Mr. Stearns made his appearance. The father stood a moment as if expecting an explanation of what was passing. Mr. Appleton sat holding his sobbing boy, while all the rest of the family was gathered around them; but as no one spoke he asked quickly—

"Has anything happened?"

"He wants to stay here," cried Lizzie. "Will you please let him?"

"I'm afraid of ma," sobbed the boy.

Gilbert sank down in a chair and covered his face with his hands, while his friends gazed at him with heartfelt sympathy; but what could they say to comfort him?

HOW WILLIAM GOT A PLACE.

Two boys applied for a place in a gentleman's store. One was older than the other, and had some experience in the business. He was a gentleman's son and well dressed. The other was the only son of a poor widow. His clothes were well mended, but perfectly clean, and his face had a quiet, honest expression which made a favourable impression upon a stranger. Though the elder lad came recommended from a gentleman he highly esteemed, the merchant decided in favour of the widow's son, quite to the surprise of every one.

A circumstance which seemed trifling in itself, had influenced the merchant in making his decision.

The two boys came together at the hour appointed, and the merchant was on his own doorstep at the same time. Just then a poor little shivering child crossed the street, and as she stepped on the sidewalk her foot slipped on the icy stones, and she fell in the half melted snow. The elder boy laughed rudely at her sorry appearance, the water dripping from her thin, ragged clothes, but the child began crying bitterly, and searching for the four pennies she had lost. William, the younger boy, hastened to her side and helped her search for them. Two were found in the snow, the other two were probably in the icy pool beside the curbstone. William bravely stripped up his sleeve and plunged his hand down into the water, groping about till one of the missing pennies was found, but the other seemed hopelessly lost.

"I am afraid that cannot be found, little girl," said he, pleasantly.

"Then I can't get the bread," sobbed the child, "and mamma and the children will have no supper."

"There is a penny," said William, taking one from a little purse which contained but very few more, and then he made haste to wash off his hand in the snow and dry it on his coarse white handkerchief.

The other boy looked on with contempt, and remarked as they passed along in:

"It is plain enough you are a greenhorn in the city."

The gentleman had observed it all, and scarcely asked the rude boy a question, but after some conversation with William, he said he would be willing to take him for a time on trial.

At the end of his month of probation, he had grown so much in favor with all parties that the engagement was renewed for a year.

Now, shall I tell you the secret of his success? It was his politeness. That means a kind expression of kind feelings. Many very fashionable people are far from being polite, and sometimes the most lowly are most remarkable for it. The merchant knew that the boy who would be truly polite to a poor, ragged child, would never be impolite to customers. He knew that a boy whose principles would hold out when he was laughed at, could be trusted. Remember, that the boy who is uniformly polite in his behaviour, has ten chances of success in the world where a rude boy has one.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

WHY HE COULDN'T.

I read lately of a boy, you may name him John if you like, who ran into the house one evening and said—

"Mother, Willie played truant this afternoon, and he wanted me to go too, but I couldn't."

"Couldn't! why not, my son?"

"Because," said little John, throwing his arms most lovingly around his mother's neck, "I thought it would make you so sorry, and that is why I couldn't."

I wish I knew that boy. I would go at least a mile to kiss him. There is something so lofty in his reason for not going with Willie that I really love him. You see it was not fear but love that governed him. He couldn't play truant because it would make his mother feel so sorry! Precious boy!

Brown's Bronchial Troches

Cure Cough, Cold, Hoarseness, Influenza, any irritation or Soreness of the throat, relieve the Hacking Cough in Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh, clear and give strength to the voice of Public Speakers and Singers.

Few are aware of the importance of checking a Cough or "slight Cold" in its first stages; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected, soon attacks the lungs. Brown's Bronchial Troches are a most valuable article, especially so at this season of the year, when Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness and Sore Throat are so prevalent. The Troches give sure and almost immediate relief.

From Rev. J. McMurray, Halifax, N. S.

Having suffered several years with Throat Affection, to which clergymen are especially subject, and having used various remedies, I have pleasure in giving my testimony as to the relief I have had in the discharge of my Sabbath labors from the use of Brown's Bronchial Troches. They have been a great relief. Others to whom I have recommended them have used them with advantage.

"A simple and elegant combination for Coughs, &c."
Dr. G. F. BOKLOW, Boston.

"Have proved extremely serviceable for Hoarseness."
Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

"I have been much afflicted with Bronchial Affection, producing Hoarseness and Cough. The Troches are the only effectual remedy, giving power and clearness to the voice." Rev. GEO. SLACK, Minister Church of England,
Milton Parsonage, Canada.

Sold by all Druggists at 25 cents per box. July 11.

The Mighty Healer.

WORLD KNOWN AND WORLD TRIED!

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT!

The free admissions of all nations, as well as the verdict of the leading hospitals of the old world, stamp this powerful remedial agent as the greatest healing preparation ever made known to suffering man. Its PENETRATIVE QUALITIES are more than MARVELLOUS; through the external orifices of the skin, invisible to the naked eye, it reaches the seat of the internal disease; and in all external affections its anti-inflammatory and healing virtues surpass anything else on record, and is Nature's great ally.

ERYSIPELAS AND SALT RHEUM

Are two of the most common and virulent disorders prevalent on this continent; to these the Ointment is especially antagonistic—its modus operandi is first to eradicate the vermin and then complete the cure.

BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, AND ULCERS.

Cases of many years standing, that have pertinaciously refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful unguent.

ERUPTIONS ON THE SKIN.

Arising from a bad state of the blood or chronic diseases, are eradicated, and a clear and transparent surface regained by the restorative action of this Ointment. It surpasses many of the cosmetics and other toilet appliances in its power to dispel rashes and other disfigurements of the face.

PILES AND FISTULA.

Every form and feature of these prevalent and stubborn disorders is eradicated locally and entirely by the use of this emollient; warm fomentations should precede its application. Its healing qualities will be found to be thorough and invariable.

Both the Ointment and Pills should be used in the following cases:

Bunions,	Rheumatism,	Sore Heads,
Burns,	Ringworm,	Sore Throats,
Chapped Hands,	Salt Rheum,	Sores of all kinds,
Chilblains,	Scalds,	Sprains,
Fistula,	Skin Diseases,	Stiff Joints,
Gout,	Swelled Glands,	Tetter,
Lumbago,	Sore Legs,	Ulcers,
Mercurial Eruptions,	Sore Breasts,	Wounds of all kinds.
Piles,

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Watermark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

☞ Sold at the Manufactories of Professor HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in pots at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 each.

☞ There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each pot. Oct. 30.
