THE GREAT BOAT RACE

Many Thousands Witnessed the Triumph of the Cambridge University Eight Over Harvard on Saturday.

Putney, Eng., Sept. 9.—Saturday's boat race between crews of Harvard and Cambridge universities, whica was won by the Englishmen by two lengths, was probably the most surprising ever rowed on the Thames, not so much because of the result, as it had been considered anybody's race since the crews moved to Putney, as of the way in which it was won. The time of the winners was 19 minutes 16 seconds. The record for the course is 18 minutes 47 seconds.

Cambridge, as had been feared by the supporters of Harvard and hoped for by Englishmen, got away better than their opponents, securing a lead which they maintained and which they increased to three lengths before Hammersmith bridge was reached. Both crews as they went under the bridge were rowing steadily at 28 strokes to the minute, neither apparently exerting itself. Suddenly Harvard began to put more power in her work, and although Cambridge already had the race won and had the advantage of water conditions, her men were compelled to increase the stroke to 33 and finished a tired-out crew. The Harvard men, on the other hand, were apparently quite fresh and took their boat across the river at a brisk rate.

English experts say there is but one explanation for the result, that of superiority of English oarsmanship and of the English stroke.

Harvard, the experts declare, was one of the finest crews physically ever seen on the river, but they were unable to overcome that training which English oarsmen receive from childhood. The Cambridge crew had the advantage of choice of sides; but those who know the river best say this was little in their favor with tide and wind as they were Saturday.

The crowd which lined the Thames banks from Putney to Mortlake and was massed on bridges, roofs and balconies, and weighed down the boughs of trees, was a record one for recent years. Of Americans there were hundreds, all showing the Harvard colors.

When the light blues were seen to have gained an advantage at the start a great cheer went up from the crowds on Putney bridge, in Fulham Park and on the Putney towpath. It was taken up by those farther along and continued without interruption to the end of the race, when there was a final tremendous outburst from the people on Barnes bridge, the excursion steamers anchored at the finish and the thousands and thousands who had gathered at Mortlake.

As the Cambridge crew crossed the line winner of the race, the Harvard men for the moment were forgotten in the enthusiasm, but when the two crews were seen intermingling ashore and an enthusiastic Harvard man gave his college yell, cheers resounded for the visitors, who, by their sportsmanlike behavior, have made a splendid impression in English rowing circles. The excitement culminated when the crews returned to their boathouses. From both sides of the river roar after roar went up, and while the enthusiasm for the Cambridge men was intense the Americans also were generously cheered. The two boathouses are separated by a small lawn fenced off from the tow path, and the crowd despite the efforts of police, broke this fence, sweeping away the line of police in order to get near the oarsmen.

Still another reception awaited the visitors and vanquished as they returned down the river by steamer, but at Putney the climax was reached, when the crowds cheered until fatigue compelled them to desist.

Captain Filley of the Harvard boat laconically declared that his men were beaten fairly and squarely, Coach Wray was gloomy and had nothing to say except that his crew had been beaten on their merits and that he had no excuse to offer. Mr. Muttlebery, the Cambridge coach, was more free in his comment. He said:

"The race is one which will be remembered for years. The Harvard men made up the best crew ever sent out from the United States, and I think this was due to the influence of Mr. Lehmann's coaching on his last visit to Massachusetts. I have every reason to think that the race today was not so much of the runaway order as so many of the English critics predicted. With another year and a little more of the English style the Harvard men will be dangerous opponents. I hope the Americans will favor us with another visit in a year or two."

ARCHBISHOP CONSECRATED

Rev. Dr. McCarthy Formally Installed in Office at Halifax With Imposing Ceremony.

Halifax, Sept. 10.—Sunday was a red letter day in the history of the Roman Catholic church in this city as it marked the consecration of the Most reverend Edward J. MacCarthy D. D., as archbishop of Halifax.

The reverend prelate, who is a native of Halifax, has lately been rector of Mary's parish, is extremely popular, and St. Mary's Cathedral, where the ceremony took place, was crowded to the doors.

The ceremonies were opened at ten o'clock, with pontifical high mass, the celebrant and consecrating archbishop being his excellency, the Most Rev. Donatus Sbarretti of Ottawa, archbishop of Ephesus and apostolic prelate to the Dominion of Canada.

Among the eminent men of the church who assisted in the ceremonies were Archbishop Duhamel, Ottawa; Archbishop Bruchesi, Montreal; Bishop Barry, Chatham, N. B., Bishop McDonald, Prince Edward Island Bishop Arnord, Valleyfield, P. Q.; Bishop Racicot, bishop coadjutor of Montreal; Bishop Casey, St. John N. B.; Bishop Cameron, Antigonish, N. S., and clergy from all parts of Nova Scotia. Doctors Shahan and Pace, of the Catholic University, Washington, and Father McGoldrick of Brooklyn, N. Y., there friends of Archbishop McCarthy came to Halifax for the consecration, and presented his grace with the Episcopal ring.

The laity presented his grace with an address and a check for $2,000, and the clergy gave him a gold chalice. The celebrant at pontifical vespers was Archbishop McCarthy and the sermon was preached by Rev. Father Connolly, S. J., of Guelph, Ont.

Archbishop McCarthy made a fitting and eloquent reply to both presentations, at the close of which he delivered his blessing.

After consecration ceremonies the visiting prelates and clergy lunched at the convent of the Sacred Heart, and last night they dined at St. Mary's Parish Hall.
