FROM "THE SHORE OF ETERNITY."

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
With no one sight that we have seen before;
Things of a different hue,
And the sounds all new,
And fragrance so sweet the soul may faint,
Alone! Oh, the first hour of being a saint!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
On which no wavelets lisp, no billows roar,
Perhaps no shape of ground,
Perhaps no sight or sound,
No forms of earth our fancies to arrange—
But to begin alone that mighty change!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
Knowing so well we can return no more;
No voice or face of friend,
None with us to attend
Our disembarking on that awful strand,
But to arrive alone in such a land!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
To begin alone to live forever more,
To have no one to teach
The manners of the speech
Of that new life, or put us at our ease;
Oh that we might die in pairs or companies!

Alone? the God we know is on that shore,
The God of whose attractions we know more
Than of those who may appear
Nearest and dearest here;
Oh, is He not the life-long Friend we know
More privately than any friend below?—

Alone? the God we trust is on that shore,
The Faithful One whom we have trusted more
In trials and in woes
Than we have trusted those
On whom we leaned most in our earthly strife:
Oh, we shall trust Him more in that new life!

Alone? the God we love is on that shore—
Love not enough, yet whom we love far more,
And whom we love all through,
And with a love more true
Than other loves—yet now shall love him more:
True love of Him begins upon that shore!

So not alone we land upon that shore;
'Twill be as though we had been there before;
We shall meet more we know
Than we can meet below,
And find our rest like some returning dove,
And be at home at once with our Eternal love!

Miscellaneous.

"DONT WANT TO."

"Time to get up, Freddie?" and Mrs. Thompson's voice was very pleasant, as she tried to rouse the sleeping child. "Time for little boys to be out of bed." But the little boy only turned over; looked very cross, and whined out, "I don't want to." He didn't hear the birds calling him from the rose bush by the window, chirping away: "Get up; get up!" He didn't see the sun peeping through the blinds, while a tiny sunbeam, fairly dancing over the bed, tried with all its might to creep between the heavy eyelids. But they only winked and shut themselves the tighter, as if the sunbeam was a saucy fellow, and not minding his own business. Now the truth was, that was just what he was sent for, and danced away more merrily than ever, right over Freddie's face. But it was all to no purpose, for the brighter the sunbeam became, and the more pleasantly his dear mamma spoke to him, the crosser Freddie grew.

"I wish you'd shut the blinds tighter, for that horrid sun shines right in my eyes. O, dear, why can't a fellow sleep when he feels like it? I don't want to get up yet."

"You must learn to wake up earlier," was the reply; "all the trouble is, you've slept too long already. Get up like a good boy, and when you've washed your face, I've some pews for you."

Freddie's curiosity got the better of his laziness, and he said, jumping out of bed: "I'm up, mother; what is it?"

"Well, wash your face, for I can't tell a little boy anything with such sleepy eyes as those."

Freddie pouted, but managed to do as he was told.

"Now," said he; before the towel was fairly away from his rosy cheeks, "What is it, mother?"

"Guess who's come?"

"O! I don't want to guess, please tell me."

"Well, Uncle Frank is down stairs this very minute."

On went shoes and stockings, coat and pants, more quickly than they ever did before, I imagine, for Uncle Frank was Freddy's favorite of all his uncles, and he had a good many, too. Indeed Uncle Frank was a favorite with everybody, with his pleasant temper and kind heart. He was a true christian, and had learned the lesson Jesus taught, that he who lives most for others leads the happiest life. Down came Freddy, so bright and lively, you would hardly believe it was the cross boy, who only a short time before scolded the little sunbeam, and was so impatient with his dear, kind mother.

Freddie wasn't what is called a bad boy. He told the truth, had never played truant, and no one ever heard him use a wicked or profane word. But he had a terrible fault—(I wonder if any of you have the same?)—he never wanted to do as he was told. The boys at school nick-named him, "Don't want to," and the girls all used to say: "Never ask Freddie Thomson to do anything, you may be sure he don't want to." Uncle Frank wasn't long in finding out Freddie's fault; indeed, a very stupid person must soon discover it. He made up his mind to try to do what he could to break him of it, for he knew how unhappy he was making him, as well as those around him. More than all this, it was displeasing to his heavenly Father.

Things went on rather more smoothly for a day or two after his uncle came, for Fred was on his good behaviour. But in a little while the restraint had worn away, and Freddie's "don't want to's" were as numerous as ever.

One morning, as they sat by the breakfast table, his mother looking up, said: "Freddie, I want you to take some jelly over to old Mrs. Bennett. She is very sick, you know."

"O! I don't want to," was the answer; "can't Biddy go. I want to play."

Before his mother could reply, his uncle looked up, and said quietly: "I will take it over. Little boys who don't want to do a kindness, shouldn't have the privilege."

Freddie's face grew very red; he hardly knew what to make of it. Not knowing what to answer, he hung his head like a guilty little boy, as he knew he was. That afternoon, as he saw his uncle and mother start, ladened with a basket full of good things, and thought how poor Mrs. Bennett's eyes would sparkle with delight when she saw them, and how glad little Beanie, her orphan grand-child, would be to taste them, he found out for once he was mistaken, when he thought "he didn't want to," for he did. He made up his mind he would try and do differently, and for a day or two he really seemed to be in earnest. But it was not long before another trial came.

Freddie had been feeling "out of sorts" all the morning, and when his mother said to him at noon: "Freddie, school is out earlier than usual this afternoon I heard you say, and I wish you would come directly home."

"Oh! mother," he answered peevishly; "I don't want to. The boys are going to play ball on the common."

His mother was about to tell him he had better think twice before he spoke so impatiently, as he would miss a great deal more by staying away than in coming home; when Uncle Frank glanced at her as much as to say not to speak, and said: "Well, Fred, we don't want any boys 'round here this afternoon who don't want to be here."

Freddie was half inclined to change his mind, but was not manly enough to own he was in the wrong, and went off in a very bad humor with himself and all around him.

"I don't know why it is," he grumbled, "but they always want me just at the wrong time."

Freddie forgot it would have been very difficult to have found the right time. Instead of obeying conscience and going home, he stayed to play ball. But somehow or other, everything went wrong. He couldn't pitch or catch to suit himself, and his bad humor increased every moment, until throwing down the ball in a pet, before the game was half over, he started towards home.

"What's the matter now, Fred?" shouted Charlie Fox.

"Only one of 'don't want to's' kinks. I would'nt call him back for a kingdom. We'll get along a heap better without him than with him. Obstinate little donkey," and Ned Preston gave the ball a vigorous fling as he finished speaking.

When Freddie reached home, it was very quiet. His little sister was nowhere around; the parlors were empty; uncle Frank's straw hat wasn't on the hat-rack, and he called "mother" at the top of his voice, but no answer came.

"Where are they all, Biddy?" he said, bursting into the kitchen.

"Sure, they're whare ye won't be in a hurry. Gone over to Mr. Peeks' for a strawberry ate."

"Gone to Mr. Peeks, and without me?" and Fred's voice fairly broke down, and he sobbed outright.

"Yes, that they have. Didn't I hear yer uncle wid me own eyes spaking to yer mother; and a saying, it would be afther teaching ye a lesson wid yer don't want to's."

Biddy didn't look very sympathizing, for she too had felt the effects of Fred's disobliging disposition.

"It's cryin' that won't be helpin' ye, to my thinking; but a mendin' yer ways."

But Fred's sobs were so pitiful, that after a while even Biddy's heart was softened. The good soul tried to comfort him, and offered to make him a little short-cake for his supper; but it was all in vain. The wound was too deep to be healed even by a short-cake.

"Faix, what's become of yer appetite?" was Biddy's question, as she saw Fred leave his supper almost untasted. His appetite had flown, and it seemed as if every mouthful that he ate would choke him. But that evening he did a great deal of thinking, and his eyes, for the first time, were fairly open to his fault. When he met his mother and his uncle at the gate as they drove home in the moonlight, his heart was full. Even the grief he had felt in his lost pleasure was swallowed up in the determination to do differently in the future.

It had been as great a sorrow to Mrs. Thomson as her little son, that he should have lost so much enjoyment, by the indulgence of his temper; but she felt she had acted wisely when he told her the result.

"As his uncle Frank bade him 'good-night,' he said, "remember, Fred, it will take more strength than you have got to break off this fault. Ask your heavenly Father to help you, and you may be sure you will."

Freddie, in a low voice, told him he had, and he meant to every day.

"That's right, my boy," said his uncle. "And it won't be long before we'll all forget that Freddie Thomson even deserved the nickname of 'Don't want to.'"—Ch. Freeman.

WHAT DO YOUR CHILDREN READ?

A lad of sixteen lay upon his death-bed. A wasting consumption was slowly but surely doing its fatal work. He was a former pupil of mine. I approached his bed-side, took him by the hand, and gazed a moment on his thin, emaciated form, pale, hollow cheeks, and sunken eyes—all telling me that his sojourn on earth must be brief.

"How are you to-day, Arthur?" I asked.

"About as usual," he replied.

"Do you suffer much lying here?"

"Sometimes I suffer a good deal, especially from difficulty in breathing."

"Do you think you will get well?"

"No, sir."

"Would you like to get well?"

"It makes but little difference with me whether I do or not."

"Does the thought of approaching death give you any anxiety or alarm?"

"I have no fears or cares about it."

"Do you feel willing to die?"

"I have wished I were dead a hundred times since I have been sick, to get rid of my sufferings."

"What is your hope for the future."

"I do not consider myself at all about the future." Afterwards I asked him if I should pray.

"I do not care, if you want to pray," he replied.

In two or three days he died. His father made this remark in my hearing: "My son lies in yonder cemetery—an INFIDEL—from the effects of novel reading!"

LINES

WRITTEN AFTER A VISIT TO THE GRAVE OF ROBERT J. LETS, WHO DIED, AFTER A VERY BRIEF ILLNESS, ON THE 27TH OF APRIL, 1867, AGED 17 YEARS, 11 MONTHS AND 28 DAYS.

The opening flowers send forth their native sweets,
With balmy fragrance on the morning air,
Unmindful that some accident might crush
And trample down ere they became aware.

Perhaps a canker worm, traveling within
Unseen, might now be eating at the core;
Mildew, or blight, or early frost might nip
The flower that bloomed so beautiful before.

'Twas thus that my dear boy was snatched away,
In early life, by death's resistless hand;
Nipt like the flower, in the full bloom of youth,
To bloom and flourish in the "Better Land."

No more oppressed with sickness or decay,
No feverish pulse, nor aching head annoys,
Jesus' own hand hath wiped away all tears,
And given thee peace and everlasting joys.

O may I take the warning, and prepare
To meet thee on that blest eternal shore,
Where all is peace, and happiness, and joy,
And friends united there shall part no more.

Farewell, dear Robert, a long, a sad farewell—
I mourn the loss of thee, my only son,
Though sorely stricken and weighed down with grief,
My bleeding heart would say, "Thy will be done."

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY, 92 Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance buildings, Liverpool.
Chairman of the London Board.—SAMUEL BAKER, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—CHARLES TURNER, Esq.
The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.
At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following mighty satisfactory results were shown:—

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.
The Premiums for the year 1855 being.....£130,060
While the Premiums for the year 1858 are.... 196,148
Showing an actual increase of..... 66,088
or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.
The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than maintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London Insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the moiety of its advance.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

The amount of new Life Premiums received this year is by far the largest received in any similar period since the commencement of the business, and must far exceed the average of amount received by the most successful offices in the kingdom. The number of policies issued in the year was 822, the sum assured £387,752 6s. 8d., and the premium £12,354 3s. 4d. These figures show a very rapid extension of business during the last ten years. Thus:—

| Years. | No. of Policies. | Sums Assured. | New Premiums. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1848 | 93 | £48,764 17 0 | £1,250 9 1 |
| 1850 | 199 | 95,650 9 11 | 3,827 4 7 |
| 1852 | 432 | 151,504 16 8 | 5,824 5 10 |
| 1854 | 498 | 161,848 13 4 | 4,694 16 0 |
| 1856 | 703 | 297,560 16 8 | 8,850 3 11 |
| 1858 | 822 | 387,752 6 8 | 12,354 3 4 |

The remarkable increase in the business of the last four years, is mainly consequent upon the large bonus declared in 1855, which amounted to no less than £2 per cent. per annum on the sums assured and averaged 80 per cent. upon the premiums paid.

RAYMOND'S
Family Sewing Machine.

THIS convenient little Machine has been manufactured and sold in Canada, with slight improvements from time to time, for more than five years past, and has also been exported in large quantities to England and Germany; but has never been introduced into these Lower Provinces until by the undersigned Agents within the past few months, and is therefore not to be mistaken for other small Machines of an inferior kind. This Machine is equally adapted to all kinds of family work, fine or coarse. The machinery is strong and the work durable. It is very easily understood and managed, on account of its simplicity; with the printed instructions, any one of ordinary capacity can learn its use without other aid. It is not liable to get out of order. It has all the latest improvements. We warrant the Machine to do all that is promised for it. In case of damage by accident or otherwise, repairs will be effected at reasonable charges. Cash orders by mail attended to as promptly as possible, and the Machines packed with care. All appurtenances included in the above price. From numerous testimonials in hand, we select the few following:
"Taking all things into account, is is undoubtedly the best Machine for family use. Its cheapness, combined with its efficacy, makes it a Sewing Machine for the Million.—After some months' trial, it is only justice to say that it has far exceeded our expectations, and proved itself an efficient Machine for all ordinary purposes."—Canada Farmer.
The neatness, strength, and durability of the Sewing is attested by such parties in Toronto and Montreal as—Mrs. Ryerson, do. Ryerson, D. D., Chief Sup't. of Schools for Canada West; Mrs. Porter—Rev. J. Porter, Supt. of Toronto City Schools; Mrs. Jennings—Rev. J. Jennings, D. D.; Mrs. Nickson—Rev. A. Nickson, LL.D.; Mrs. Lesslie—Jos. Lesslie, Esq., Postmaster of Toronto; Mrs. Dr. Rolph; Miss Matthews, Dress Maker; Mrs. Pipon—Col. Pipon, Royal Artillery; Mrs. Ogilby—J. Ogilby, Esquire, Wholesale Merchant; with many others in these places and in nearly all parts of Canada, particularly the West.—We append also a few local Testimonials:
November, 1866.
"We, the undersigned, are using Raymond's Family Sewing Machine in our family, and would concur in the recommendation of it by parties in Canada—
