Summerside, $1,334.87; increase, $198.98.
Total, $12,906.95; increase, $3,043.78.
Net increase, $2,952.14.

Mrs. E. C. Turner, representative of the Women's Missionary Society, spoke of the work being done by that society. They decided to send out ten new workers each year for the next four years. They raised $3,000 above the amount of the previous year. It is the aim to have every woman a member of the society and every girl a member of some circle or band. They stood for scriptural holiness throughout our land.

J. N. Harvey, of St. John, president of the laymen's association of this conference, was then introduced. The speaker said that no doubt the efforts being now put forth by the laymen is due in no small degree to the Women's Missionary Society of the church. The laymen have been able to show during the past year nearly $3,000 increase over last year. It is estimated that about 40,000 missionaries would be necessary to evangelize the world. The work laid down for us to do is to look after those who come to our shore. The Methodists are to look after 14,000, and we will have to increase our givings. This conference would have to raise $70,000 and to support thirty-five missionaries. Are we able to do it, or is the scheme too large for us? All we want is one per cent of the income of Protestant church members. Ten cents a week from every church member in the Methodist church will carry this scheme through to a successful issue. The world is open to the missionary, let us go forward and do our share.

Rev. Jas. Allen, general secretary of the Methodist Missionary Society, was then introduced, and he in opening his address, wished to bear testimony to the work being done by the Women's Missionary Society. Much of the increase in the work, the speaker said, was due to the untiring efforts put forth by the superintendent of missions, Rev. Thos. Marshall.

The speaker dealt largely with the new or latest phase of missionary work, the great immigration problem of the great west. His was a well thought out address, and a mass of information was given the people to guide them and to encourage them in their future work.

The supply for Exmouth street church, St. John, Sunday services, is Rev. A. D. McLeod.

Cupid in the Summertime

With the coming of vacation time Cupid packs his grip and hies himself to the seashore, the mountains and the country, where gather the flirtatious summer girl and her corps of attendant swains. Throughout the whole vacation he hovers around in cozy hammocks, under leafy bowers, and in the shadows cast by trees intercepting the bright, full moon. It is the season of the year for him, and his harvest of bleeding hearts is greatest in the good old summer time.

It is a fact that more marriages result from acquaintanceships made in the vacation season than at any other time of year. Perhaps it is because man is more sentimentally inclined then than at any other time. Or maybe the average woman is able to look her best in light, summery creations. Or perhaps it is the almost universal letting down of the bars of conventionality and the at times indiscriminating reception of fellow-lodgers at one's summer resort into the circle of acquaintanceship, at least. Whatever the cause, however, the fact remains that vacation time needs only the man and the maid to afford a plentiful supply of Cupid's victims.

And right here it may not be amiss to pause for a moment and consider that acquaintanceship between man and maid, for a girl cannot be too discreet in her actions toward the male members of the little colony in which she is spending the summer. The average girl wants to be popular, for there is no place where lack of popularity will be more keenly felt than at the summer resort.

A large portion of the vacationists, if not all of them, are fairly argus-eyed in discovering who's who when hearts are trumps among the young folks. And the girl who wants to have a good time, without being talked about, has a decidedly straight and narrow road to travel. Somehow, the very atmosphere seems one of flirtatious contagion, and unless she minds her sentimental P's and Q's most carefully the old gossips, who sit in their arm chairs on the veranda and tear and render the reputations of those around them to pieces, will make her visit anything but pleasant.

Blessed and happy is the girl, indeed, who does everything in crowds and is just as willing to talk to any and every one of the male boarders, without preference—even though she is not apt to gain a husband by doing so. "Twosing" is a bad business—unless it is for keeps—and then it isn't anybody's business except the couple who are "twosing." Even then the girl should remember that there is many a heart won in the summer and discarded as soon as the leaves turn brown. It is all very well to choose the very handsomest man on the scene and put your own individual label on him—it makes the other girls envious and gives you a certain feeling of elation—but it often proves a boomerang that rebounds to your own discredit and unhappiness.

A proposal on a summer night under a leafy bough is often the moon talking, not the man. It is very embarrassing to have a man as your devoted attendant at the summer resort and then, in the ensuing winter when someone else you met at the resort happens to call upon you and ininquire suggestively as to the health of that particular man, to be compelled to admit that you have not seen him recently, or to employ some quite apparent subterfuge to avoid the unpleasant question. Somehow, almost any man seems to give promise of sterling marital qualities on a summer's night, though if considered in that light on a winter's evening he is not eligible or desirable in any way.

Besides, as soon as a girl fairly throws herself at a man, as many are inclined to do in the summer, the other men lose interest and other girls become catty. On the other hand, it is anything but good taste for a girl to really put herself out in trying to impress the eligible masculine element present with the fact that she is fairly beseiged with beaux at home who are fairly starving for a sight of her. Do not write your love letters on the veranda for the especial benefit of the half dozen or so men who anxiously and jealously watch men who anxiously and jealously watch you do so. It is all very nice and flattering for one's vanity, but it is frightfully bad form and far beyond the pale of good taste. The foolish, unthinking chap may be spurred on to a sudden unhasty act of proposal by such a display, but the man really worth while is sensible enough to take it at its real value. If he and the rest of the fellows are told exactly what chap you are writing to, and how many letters he has written you in the past week without receiving an answer, etc., he will quickly see that his own letters might be a subject of general discussion were he in the other fellow's shoes.

Keep your own affairs of this sort to yourself and with the men at the resort to be a good companion ever ready for a lark that does not exceed the bounds of sensible conventionality—unless you are really in love with one of the chaps, and then there is no use giving you any advice at all.

THE NEW SULTAN AS A PATHETIC FIGURE

It is not reasonable to expect a too critical opinion of a man to be delivered just after he becomes the ruler of millions of people, and therefore an article by Kageton Dunbar on the Sultan of Turkey, written from Constantinople and published in the Philadelphia Ledger, does not err on the side of severity. From his published portraits, Mehemed V. might reasonably be set down as a sensualist, for rarely has a more unprepossessing countenance been borne by a sovereign. Mr. Dunbar, however, represents the Sultan as rather a pathetic figure, and declares him to be now fighting hard with his masters, the Young Turks, to save the life of the deposed Abdul, to whom he owes his thirty years' imprisonment.

It must be admitted that there was pathos in the bewilderment, almost the terror, of Mehemed when, with only a day's warning, he was taken from his prison and placed upon the throne of Turkey. The sights overpowered him. "Give Yildiz to the nation," he said, "I will not live in it," and with the strange attachment life prisoners often have for their cell, he has made Dolma-Bayhtche the palace. Though not aproaching Yildiz in its magnificence, the new royal residence is an imposing enough structure, overlooking the Bosphorus. For thirty years it has been the residence of the new Sultan. There he was kept a prisoner by his brother and not permitted on pain of death to leave the grounds except on special occasions. He was not even allowed to use the rooms overlooking the Bosphorus, for fear the sight of the blue waters might move in him some daring thought to escape. Now Mehemed goes pottering about the place, supervising the installation of telephones and electric lights, modern inventions which he saw for the first time after coming to the throne.

Although it is only a few months since Mehemed was tortured by having pins stuck in his body for being suspected of having communication with the Young Turks, Mehemed told Chevket Pasha that he would rather not be made Sultan if his accession meant the death of his brother. A few weeks ago, a sentry who saluted the closed carriage in which Mehemed was taking a carefully planned drive was tried by court martial. Perhaps the bitterest misfortune that befell Mehemed was ten years or so ago, when he was robbed of his favorite wife. She was taken from him by the Sultan and handed over to a courtier. Not until he came to the throne was he able to obtain the slightest clue of her whereabouts. Then he learned that she had died several years before. If a Turk, with several wives, has somewhat similar feelings for his wives as a Christian has for his wife, the forgiving nature of Mehemed may well cause astonishment.

In the first few days after his accession the new Sultan was willing, and even eager, to see any journalist who presented himself. "Do you really think there is so much poverty in this country? Do you find a great difference between Europe and this?" These were his two favorite questions. The Young Turks, however, have discouraged this exhibition of artlessness, and the Young Turks are masters of the situation. An old priest, who has been with Mehemed for years, declares: "They took him out of one prison and put him in another. The only difference is that whereas before he had one jailer, now he has a hundred." It does not appear that Mehemed is destined to be much more than a bookmark in a new chapter of Turkish history. He has shown no ambition to rule or to manage. However, he is exerting an influence to promote sociability, and to break down some of the cast-iron barriers that hitherto have hedged in the Sublime Porte.

Mehemed has three wives and four children, three sons and a daughter. The eldest is thirty-two and the youngest seven, and the existence of this little family makes it likely that the Turkish law of succession, which has led to so much bloodshed and cruelty and conspiracy, will be changed. Hitherto, it has been the eldest male kinsman of the Sultan that succeeds him, if he is as near in blood as a cousin. The probability is that the law will be altered so that the eldest son fill be the heir, and this will secure the succession of Zia Eddin. It will also put an end to the intriguing for Mehmed Burhan Effendi, the fourth and favorite son of Abdul, an energetic young man of 24, and a keen soldier. It is expected that if the reactionaries make an attempt to dethrone the present Sultan, Mehmed Burhan will me the claimant round whom they will rally. Mehemed will be content, apparently, to let the Young Turks keep him on the throne, if there is any strong movement to oust him. He is in their hands.

NEW YORK HAS ANOTHLR AWFUL MURDER MYSTERY

Young Woman's Body, Partly Clothed Found in a Trunk in a Chinaman's Room—Victim Was Strangled and Mutilated

New York, June 18—The flow of testimony adduced by the defense in the suit for separation brought by Katherine Clemmons Gould against her husband, Howard Gould, kept edging more and more today toward Dustin Farnum, the actor, whose broad shoulders and mop of curly hair have become a familiar figure in the case. There was in addition further iteration by servants and personal attendants that Mrs. Gould was repeatedly seen by them under the influence of liquor and that when she had been drinking, as they alleged on the stand, she changed from a charming, affable woman to a creature of whim and caprice, ill-tempered, not nice in her choice of language, overbearing, quarrelsome.'

Mrs. Gould's one-time personal valet swore that at one time he served his mistress two quarts of Manhattan cocktails in two days in addition to the wines and liquors which he said she drank at table. In cross-examining the witnesses, Clarence J. Shearn, for Mrs. Gould, strove always to prove either that they had a personal grudge against her or that they were under obligations to Mr. Gould.

Endearing epithets twice embellished the testimony. John H. Kimball, an oil and paint dealer, who said he had known Mr. Gould for eighteen years, testified that he went to performance of "The Virginian" in August, 1906, with Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Sells and the Goulds at the Academy of Music in this city, and that Dustin Farnum, the star in the play, joined the party outside the play-house after the performance and spoke to Mrs. Gould. She smiled, the witness testified, and said to the witness "this is my new beau."

John Flynn, who said he had been employed by Mrs. Gould as a chauffeur, and that he had often driven her to meet Farnum after the play, testified that on one occasion that the automobile with Mrs. Gould in it was waiting for Mr. Farnum at the Hotel Somerset, two men turned to the actor as he came out of the hotel door and asked him whose automobile was waiting.

"Oh," said Farnum, laughing, Flynn testified, "that is my new one."

At another time, Flynn swore, when he rapped n Mrs. Gould's chamber door at the St. Regis, she called out: "All right, dear," and then when she saw who it was excused herself with: "I thought it was Mr. Farnum."

Mary Elizabeth Harrison, a fresh-cheeked, good looking girl, who said she was a floor clerk in the Bellevue-Startford Hotel, in Philadelphia, prefaced her testimony with the explanation that it was her first appearance in court. She had been impelled by her conscience, she said, to tell what she had seen at the hotel. Finally she wrote a letter to Mr. Gould.

"I said in the letter," she testified, "'in obedience to the Golden Rule, I write to you 'to help you if you are in trouble,' or something like that."

Mrs. Gould occupied apartments on the floor where she was stationed in September, 1906, the witness went on, and one morning, she said, she saw a man come out of Mrs. Gould's rooms about 7.30 and take the elevator. She noticed that he was the only passenger in the car and that the dial registered 14th floor when the car stopped. She described the man as tall, with dark, bushy hair, and wearing a soft hat and a long coat.

The defense contends that Dustin Farnum was staying on the 14th floor of the hotel at that time, as they attempted to show by the next witness, Florence Garner, who said she was also employed in September, 1906, as a floor clerk in the Bellevue, on the 14th floor, when Dustin Farnum was playing in "The Virginian" at Philadelphia. She testified that Farnum had a room on that floor at the same time Mrs. Gould had rooms on a lower floor. She remembered one morning when he came up in the elevator rather early, and appeared to her "less well groomed" than usual.

"Did you take any means of finding out if Mr. Farnum's room had been occupied that night?" asked Delancey Nicoll, Mr. Gould's lawyer.

"No, but the maid reported that it had not been," the witness answered.

On cross-examination she said she had talked with Miss Harrison about the incident afterwards.

Court adjourned at 6 o'clock until Monday morning.

None of the plaintiff's witnesses has been heard in rebuttal, and the prospect is that the case has more than a week more to go.

HAD IT WRONG

I was in what they call a general store in Long Island village when a farmer drove up and called the proprietor to the door and asked:

"Jim, have you got any clotheslines?"

"Plenty, Tom—plenty," was the reply.

"My old woman says we ought to have a new one."

"Yes, I think I sold you the one you have about three years ago. Clotheslines will wear out, you know."

"How much for one?"

"Twenty-five cents for a hundred feet. That's the way they come. Shall I bring one out?"

"Not at that price. A tin-peddler was telling me yesterday that when the new tariff bill passed clotheslines could be had for 23 cents. Guess I'll wait a bit."

"All right, Tom—all right," good-naturedly replied the merchant as he turned away, and the deal was off.

Fifteen minutes after the farmer had driven homeward I followed him in my buggy, and I had gone a mile when I met him coming back with his horses on a sharp trot. We both halted, and I laughingly asked if he gas going back to take the clothesline.

"You bet I am!" he briskly replied. "I just met a sewing-machine man, who told me that the tin-peddler was all wrong. Instead of coming down to 23 cents, if the new tariff bill passes, they will go up to 28, and I'm going to save that three cents or bust my wagon!"

GOLF IN PORTO RICO

"Of course, after we got settled down at our station in Porto Rico we wanted golf grounds," said an American officer in speaking of past days. "When we had looked around a bit we settled on a piece of land and ascertained that it belonged to the mayor of the town. I went to him myself to see about leasing it. He was all courtesy and effusion, and though he did not know what golf was, he said that he and several other citizens would be glad to join the club. He gave us the land without charge, and we went ahead and laid out the course. One day I met him and asked him for the names to be proposed, and he seemed a bit embarrassed as he replied:

"Senor Captain, I do not think any of us care to join our club, though we wish it the most unbounded success."

"But I thought you liked to play golf," I replied.

"I myself thought I should like to, Senor but after you spoke to me a few weeks ago I found that a player knocks a ball from hole to hole for a long distance."

"That is right.' "

" 'It is up hill, down hill and on the level?' "

" 'Yes.' "

" 'He may have to walk miles in knocking the ball?' "

" 'Yes.' "

" 'He cannot be carried in a hammock?' "

" 'No.' "

" 'He cannot hire anyone to walk and knock for him?' "

" 'No.' "

" 'Then I beg you to excuse us, Senor. We wish you well, and some day we will all come out and sit in the shade while you play the game, but I fear that none of us are equal to the occasion of being members.' "

SOME COFFURIES

Classic coiffures are being worn during the warm weather and the new shirtwaist coiffure has taken rapid strides. The padding is placed on the back of the head and a round pompadour, such as is commonly placed about the face, is pinned in a wheel shape to the back of the head. The hair is waved and draped over the padding. This makes the hair look very heavy. The nenuphar, the new cabochon ornament, is being fastened at the side to give an effective touch. Efforts have been made by French hair-dressers to revive the old custom of having the hair hang down the back, but it will probably never be adopted in this country again. Many new methods of dressing the hair have originated on account of the return of the curl. This will be a feature of the summer hair-dressing and already many women have adopted the "bang." The new wave is large, loose and lifelike, and one can get the right effect with curlers as well as with a hot iron. In order to get the necessary curl the hair should be rolled around a piece of wood. With the use of a string the hair is then twisted. When dry it can be curled and combed into a ripple. It is much easier than doing the hair on papers, which is the older method and is often used.

NERVOUS PEOPLE SALT OF THE EARTH

But When Overstrained Their Highly Strung Systems Give Way and Depression and Suffering is Intense.

Money is made these days at the expense of brain and nerve rather than muscular tissues.

The successful men and women are often of the highest strung nervous type—keen and active—but with too little reserve force.

A little extra worry and anxiety and snap goes the nervous system. Weeks and months are often required before energy and vigor are regained.

Rest helps, so does fresh air and exercise, but the blood must also be made rich and red by use of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Much as they may disagree on some points, the best physicians are unanimous in cleaiming that an abundance of rich, red, life-sustaining, nerve invigorating blood is positively necessary for the restoration of the exhausted nervous system.

There is too often little sympathy for the nervous sufferer. When as a matter of fact his sufferings are most intense, being of mind as well as body.

Headaches, neuralgia, indigestion, sleeplessness, irritability, pains and cramps are often the lesser felt because of the depressed spirits and discouragements which come with loss of memory, and gloomy forebodings of the future.

The sufferer from nervous exhaustion and prostration can use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with positive assurance that the benefits derived therefrom will be both thorough and lasting.

There is no reaction from this great nerve-builder because it is not a stimulant, but a restorative and reconstructor of the wasted nervous system. 50 cts. a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Rev. Father Morriscy

Father Morriscy's "No. 11" Cures Stomach Troubles.

When your stomach is working right you never know it is there. But when it feels as heavy as lead—when you have Heartburn, Belching of Wind, Sourness, a gnawing hunger, with distress after eating—when you feel irritable and depressed — then you may know that the digestive fluids in the stomach are not sufficient to digest what you eat.

Father Morriscy's "No. 11" Tablets supply these fluids in concentrated form. Each tablet, dissolved in the stomach, will digest 1¾ pounds of food, which is more than an average meal.

Read what Father Morriscy's treatment did for Mr. Gosline, of Salmon Lake. He writes Nov. 30, 1908:

"I was troubled with indigestion, so severe that I really thought I had cancer of the stomach. I took much doctors' remedies, till I was forced to seek another resource, and this was the Rev. Father Morriscy. His treatments worked miracles, until I have been entirely cured, so that now I do not look to the quality of the diet but to the quantity."

MARINE NEWS

British steamship Pontiac Captain Meikle, arrived at Liverpool from this port last Friday with a cargo of deals.

American schooner Arthur Finney, ashore at Bear Cove (C. B.), will likely be floated Steamer Coban has gone to her assistance.

The steamer Ragnorock, Capt. Colson, which is to take pulpwood to Portland (Me.), for the Berlin Mills Company, arrived at Port Herbert (N. S.), several days ago and is about ready to leave for Portland with her first cargo.

Capt. W. Foley and crew of the American mackerel seiner Hatie M. Graham, which ran on the rocks at Little Touraine (C. B.), arrived at Louisburg (N. S.), Tuesday night. Captain Foley reports that soon after the vessel struck the rocks she pounded a hole in her bottom, filled and sank. The vessel is a total loss.

San Francisco, June 17—Rushing across the Pacific loaded with over a thousand tons of tea, the steamer Asia is seeking to land her cargo at this port before the additional tax which importers fear will be fixed on this commodity by the present congress, goes into effect. In order that no time may be lost in the race with the passage of Payne Tariff Bill, the steamer has been scheduled to come direct, omitting the Honolulu stop, and thereby saving two days.

The Manchuria and the Choyo Maru recent recent arrivals, both landed large cargoes of tea.
