DOING FOR JESUS.

Hark, the voice of Jesus crying.
"Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white and harvests waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?"
Loud and long the Master calleth,
Rich reward he offers free;
Who will answer, gladly saying,
"Here am I, send me, send me?"

If you can not cross the ocean,
And the heathen lands explore,
You can find the heathen nearer;
You can help them at your door.
If you cannot give your thousands,
You can give the widow's mite;
And the least you give for Jesus
Will be precious in his sight.

If you can not speak like angels,
If you can not preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say "He died for all."
If you cannot rouse the wicked
With the judgment's dread alarms,
You can lead the little children
To the Saviour's waiting arms.

Let none hear you idly saying,
"There is nothing I can do,"
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you.
Take the task he gives you gladly,
Let his work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when he calleth,
"Here am I, send me, send me."

Miscellaneous.

(From the Methodist.)

A STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

BY JENNIE ANDERSON.

Trust in God; or, where the need is greatest, God's help is nearest.

Good Master Hermann was a tailor in a little village in Thuringia, and there was not a happier family than his in all Fatherland. He was industrious, and generally had enough work to do. The good mother was also industrious and economical; so the children had always been as well taken care of as any in the village. Never were their garments thin or torn in the winter, or soiled in summer; and every day at noon a large dish of vegetables graced the wooden table, with often a nice piece of meat and a fine roast on every feast-day. Then would Master Hermann say, "Love and thank the dear God, my children, for this beautiful roast;" and little Fritz would always answer: "We do thank the dear God, Father, but we would thank him a great deal more if he would only make every day a feast day."

Early in the year 1770, when the fields were green the gold and purple violets in bloom, the lark sang sweetly to the sun, and every one thought the spring had surely come, one night there fell so heavy a snow that in the morning not even a single blade of grass was to be seen, and the herdsmen going to tend his cattle was obliged to wade knee deep in the snow. It was a sad day for the poor Thuringen peasants. But after a week, when the snow melted, it was still sadder. They went to look after their fields and meadows, but, alas! the snow had destroyed everything. Large, beautiful fields, that a few weeks before had been smiling with the young grain and fresh green grass, were entirely bare, the ground nearly as barren as in mid winter, scarcely a trace of vegetation remaining. Then a cry of sorrow and complaint was heard all over the land. But when the time of harvest came, the cry of sorrow was still louder and deeper. Many farmers reaped barely sufficient seed for the next year's sowing; a few obtained sufficient bread for their families, while you could count on your fingers the number of those who had a granary full, or a little to sell to their less fortunate neighbors.

Of course it was a season of extreme poverty and distress. Formerly the markets in the towns were thronged with the well-laden grain-wagons and carts of the farmers; but now it was almost a strange sight to see a load of grain, and when it so happened crowds of persons, who needed food for themselves and their children, would surround the wagon, and cry: "How much, how much is your food? It is very dear, but we must have it—we cannot starve. Give it to us, give it to us, at any price!" Then the farmers always demanded more and more for their grain, and the poor creatures would give all they could scrape together rather than starve.

The hard times affected Master Hermann as they did the rest of the neighbors. Where he formerly paid one groschen for bread, he had to pay two, then three, then four, and, at the last, five. And then he was not able to earn nearly so much by his needle as before; so the good man was obliged to deny his family many of the comforts they had hitherto enjoyed. As it took every penny he could earn to provide simple black bread, at first they had to dispense with meat and then with vegetables. A little water-soup, with, perchance, a stray potato or two and dry black bread, was the entire food of the family; and not alone were they content and satisfied, but they thanked God, from their very hearts, for keeping the hungry wolf from the door.

But, alas! this state of things could not last much longer. The most of the farmers and villagers around him were just as poor as Master Hermann was. They had also to pay so much for food that they could not afford to spend one groschen upon clothing. When their children came to them with the complaint, "See, good father, my coat is all ragged;" or, "Look, mother dear, my vest is so thin—can you not give me another?" they always received the same answer: "My dear children, these are very hard times. We can scarcely get food enough. This is no time to think of buying clothes." So, Master Hermann's work nearly ceased altogether; he was four or five weeks without earning a penny, and all that time his poor family must have something to eat every day. His heart was very heavy and sad, but he took some of the working materials that he needed least and sold them for a small sum to a wandering peddler. This money was soon spent, then he sold his best coat, a fine specimen of Master Hermann's own handiwork; then the children's best clothes, and some of the household furniture soon followed, until at last there was nothing more to sell; or, if there had been, scarcely any one in the village able to buy. He arose one morning, not knowing where to find a single crust for his hungry children. They came to him, clustered around him, fell upon his neck, and cried: "Give us some bread, dear father—we are so hungry. Oh! do give us some bread!"

Then his heart was ready to break with sorrow, but he gently said: "This morning you must fast my darling children, but by noontime you shall all have something to eat."

"But where will you get the bread from, dearest father?" asked the poor children sorrowfully.

He silently pointed to heaven, quickly turned his face away, for the tears were streaming from his eyes, and ran into the next chamber. He fell upon his knees, and sighed: "O God! O Father! my poor, suffering children—are they not also thy children? Wilt thou condemn thy poor servant to see his children perish before his face? 'Tis thy bountiful hand that feedeth the sparrow in the field, and giveth food even to the wild ravens; surely thou wilt not permit my innocent babes to die of hunger? Thy love, most merciful Father, cannot do that even to me, the most unworthy of thy servants. I trust on thee, my Father, and believe that thou wilt surely give us this day our daily bread!"

He sighed again, but this time with a sweet and comforting assurance that the good Lord would show him the way wherewith to provide a meal for his children. He had been sitting and thinking about a quarter of an hour, without coming to any definite conclusion as to what he should do, when his little daughter entered the chamber and told him that a woman wanted to speak to him. He went out, and saw the wife of one of the richest farmers from a neighboring village. She asked him if she could trust him to make a suit for herself and one for her daughter, in two or three days at the latest. It was very necessary that they should be finished immediately, as she and her daughter were summoned on Thursday to the wedding of a kinsman, and it would be disgraceful for the richest farmer's wife in Thuringia to make her appearance in an old suit.

"Willingly, willingly," answered Master Hermann in a joyful voice.

"In order to encourage you to labor with greater diligence," said the woman, "I have brought a few necessaries for you; for I know well this winter has been a hard one for all the working classes. She took a large hand-basket from under her ample cloak, while all the children gathered around her like a swarm of bees to see what the basket might contain. First came a beautiful loaf of fresh bread, then a small bag of peas, then a large pat of butter, and a quantity of smoked meat. The children looked at each other in wonder and delight, they clapped their hands for joy, embraced each other, and then turned away, one after the other, sobbing and weeping. Poor Master Hermann himself could only answer with his tears; little Fritz alone seemed in perfect possession of his senses.

The farmer's wife looked with astonishment from father to children.

"What have I done?" she asked; "what is the matter with you all?"

"Are you an angel?" boldly demanded little Fritz. "Did the dear God send you down from heaven to give us some food? I suppose you must be an angel, but I thought the angels always dressed in white robes."

Then the happy father related all the sad circumstances to her, and how the poor babes must have gone hungry had she not given them such opportune relief. She became sorrowful, and wept with them for sympathy, but rejoiced that God had chosen her to be the instrument of saving the lives of such good and pious people. This joy was so sweet to the benevolent woman, that she would have remained there all day to share it with them had it been possible.

"From this time forth, Master Hermann," she said, "you shall not suffer any want. I have still some grain in my barns, remaining from last year, enough for myself, and a little to spare. Whenever you are in need of food, come to me and you shall have it. You are no pauper, I know, Master Hermann, but an honest working-man; so I will reckon it at a cheap price, and from time to time you can do enough work for me to pay for it. I have also children, and who knows if God will still continue to bless them? Farewell, and have confidence in my word."

The whole family were almost beside themselves with joy. As soon as the kind woman was gone, the good mother prepared a bountiful meal for them. How good it was! No prince in all Germany dined so sumptuously as Master Hermann's family. What vegetables were ever equal to those dried peas, and what king ever had such a sauce as their hunger? But, above all, how they thanked the kind and gracious Father above, who is always nearest to help when the need is greatest!

RAGGED TOM, THE SURETY.

One Sabbath afternoon, a big boy stood at the door of a Sabbath school. He was so bad that he had been turned out of school the Sabbath before. His father and mother had brought him, and begged that he might be received again. The superintendent said, "We should be glad to do him good, but we are afraid he will ruin all the other children. It is very bad for a school, when a big boy sets a wicked example."

"We know he is a bad boy at school, sir," said the parents, "but he is ten times worse at home; he will be lost if you do not take him back."

"We could take him back, if we could secure his good behaviour. I will see," said the superintendent.

So he stepped back into the school, and rang the bell for silence. All listened while he said, "That boy wants to come into the school again; but we cannot take him back without making sure of his good behaviour. Will any one be surety for him."

A pause followed; the elder boys shook their heads. They said they knew him so well. The others did not care for him.

But one little boy pitied the big bad boy, and was very sorry that no one would be surety. The little boy went by the name of "Ragged Tom." It was not his fault that he was ragged, for his mother was very poor. The superintendent soon heard his little voice saying, "If you please, sir, I will, sir."

"You, Tom! a little boy like you! Do you know what it means to be a surety, Tom?"

"Yes, sir, if you please; it means that when he is a bad boy again, I'm to be punished for him."

"And are you willing to be punished for that big boy?"

"Yes, sir, if he's bad again."

"Then come in," said the superintendent, looking to the door; and the big boy, with downcast face, walked across the room. He was thinking as he walked, "I know I'm a bad boy, but I'm not so bad as that. I'll never let that little fellow be punished for me—never!" I think God put that thought into the big boy's mind. He was graciously helping Tom's work as the surety.

As the children were leaving the school, the superintendent saw this big boy and little Tom walking and talking together. He said to himself, "I am afraid that boy will do Tom harm. I must go and look after them."

When he reached the cottage where Tom lived, he said to the mother, "Where is your son, Tom?"

"Oh! he is just gone up stairs with a great boy that he brought with him. I don't know what they are doing."

"May I go up?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

The superintendent went slowly and gently up the stairs, and as he reached the top he could see through the door that Tom and the big boy were kneeling together. He soon heard Tom's voice saying, "O Lord, make this that has been the worst boy in the school, O Lord, make him the best boy."

The superintendent knelt down by Tom's side, and they all prayed together.

God heard them. The big bad boy became one of the best boys in the school. God raised up friends for "Ragged Tom," who put him to school, and, after that, sent him to a missionary college. He is now a missionary, and is preaching to the Africans about Jesus, who became the surety for sinners.—Church Union.

CAUTION! CAUTION! CAUTION!

THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.
It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.
If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve them—by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flannels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal.
Sold by most respectable Grocers and Chemists, in Packets Three Cents Each, sufficient for 20 Gallons of water, or Twelve for Thirty Cents, also in Boxes containing 144 Packets, price Three Dollars cash. ☞ Be sure to ask for Pickstone's Washing Crystal, as there are spurious imitations. Do not condemn it untried. Make one trial! Protected by Act of Parliament.
