Poetry.

"HIMSELF HATH DONE IT."

ISAIAH XXXVIII: 15.

"Himself hath done it" all! O, how these words
Should hush to silence every murmuring thought;
"Himself hath done it"—He who loves me best—
He who my soul with his own blood hath bought.

"Himself hath done it." Can it then be aught,
Thou, full of wisdom—full of tenderest love,
Not one unneeded sorrow will He send
To teach this wandering heart no more to rove.

"Himself hath done it." Yes, although severe
May seem the stroke, and bitter be the cup,
'Tis His own hand that holds it; and I know
He'll give me grace to drink it meekly up.

"Himself hath done it." O, no arm but His
Could e'er sustain beneath earth's dreary lot;
But while I know He doeth all things well
My heart His loving-kindness questions not.

"Himself hath done it." He who searched me through
Sees how I cling to earth's ensnaring ties;
And so He breaks each reed on which my soul
Too much for happiness and joy relies.

"Himself hath done it." He would have me see
What broken cisterns human friends must prove,
That I may turn and quench my burning thirst
At His own fount of everlasting love.

"Himself hath done it." Then I fain would say—
Thy will in all things ever more be done;
E'en though that will remove whom best I love,
While Jesus lives I cannot be alone.

"Himself hath done it"—precious, precious word,—
Himself—my Father, Saviour, Brother, Friend!
Whose faithfulness no donation knows—
Who, having loved me, loves me to the end.

And when in His eternal presence blest,
I at His feet my crown immortal cast,
I'll gladly own, with all His ransom'd saints—
"Himself hath done it" all, from first to last.

Miscellaneous.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY.

BY T. TAYLOR.

In the fourth story of a tall, dreary looking tenement house there was one bright spot—the cheerful room where Grandmother Brown lived with her little grand-daughter, Polly, whose father was a sailor and was very seldom at home. The street was dark, and so narrow that it seemed impossible for the sun to creep in on the cold winter days, though in summer it managed to come in and blister and scorch the little paint that was on the high house. The staircase was dark and narrow and not very clean, and it seemed like stepping out of dismal darkness into cheerful light when you opened the door of Grandmother Brown's neat, pleasant room.

There was no pretty furniture there, nothing bright and handsome, for the carpet before the stove was darned and patched in some places, the few old-fashioned chairs were cushioned with patchwork, and the old-fashioned bedstead was covered with the same sort of embroidery, all made by the kind, industrious hands of Grandmother Brown, who was the best thing to look at in the room, with her white cap and white hair, her silver spectacles, and pleasant smile, and kind words for all who came in to see her.

It was Sunday, and she was sitting by the stove, which was polished as bright as a piece of black satin, waiting for Polly to come home from the Missionary meeting. The kettle shone and sang merrily, the glass window-panes shone so that all the light that could come in might do so, and the geranium that grew in the wooden box turned all its leaves toward it to give it welcome, for flowers and leaves never turn their backs upon the light.

"Polly is coming, pussy," said grandmother, as the cat came by her side and purred. Pussy perhaps understood it; for though it is said cats do not love their owners, this one ran to the door as Polly's light step was heard springing up the staircase, and the room to grandmother seemed brighter when the door opened and Polly entered. The smiles spread all over the kindly old wrinkled face. Pussy purred louder than before, and the kettle sang its old song faster.

"Get off your things and we will get ready for tea," said grandmother, for she saw a cloud resting over Polly's sunny face, "and then you will tell me all about this afternoon, and we will read your father's letter again."

The cloud lightened a little, and by the time the two plates and two cups and saucers and the bread and butter were on the table, the cloud disappeared rapidly, and when the tea was made and they sat at their supper, it had gone away entirely. Grandmother waited until Polly stooped down to stroke pussy, who was stretched out in the warmest spot on the carpet before the stove; then she knew that Polly was very comfortable herself.

"And how about the meeting, Polly?" asked her grandmother, as she was finishing her second cup of tea. "Tell me all about that."

Polly's face clouded over again. "I believe I shall never go again," she exclaimed, half angrily, half sadly. "It's no use; I can't do any good; I might as well stay home."

"You can sing, can't you?" asked grandmother mildly.

"Why, yes, I suppose so, but I was so ashamed and felt so mean when our class was called. "Little Workers," they called out. Our teacher wasn't there; she never is on Missionary Sundays; so one of the girls took up ten cents—it was all we had; and then a gentleman made a speech to the school, and said, 'Those who only had ten cents couldn't be hard workers;' and none of the girls have any money in our class; and he told a story about his son, who came to him and said he wouldn't eat any butter if he might take the money to the Missionary Society; his father gave him the butter and some more money both; and I don't believe all the girls in our class eat butter very often anyhow. I was so ashamed I thought I should never care to go again."

"I am sorry the gentleman made that speech," said grandmother. "Did any one else say anything?"

"Yes, but I couldn't listen," exclaimed Polly in vexation. "I only wanted to get up and come home."

"It was a great pity, Polly. I wish that you could tell me something the others said, perhaps you would have liked what they said better."

"I didn't—I couldn't, after his speech," said Polly. "And do you see any use in my going again, grandmother. I am sure I can't help the missionaries; I can't preach; I can't go away and teach them; I can't even get a little money to give them."

"Let us read the Bible first, and when we have finished, I will answer your question if I can."

The table was cleared. Polly sat down on a low stool, with pussy on her lap, after she had brought the Bible to her grandmother, who turned to the 12th chapter of Mark, and read aloud until she came to the 42d and 43d verses:

"And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And he called unto him his disciples and saith unto them: Verily I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury."

"You see, Polly, this poor widow did all she could. She had no large sum, no silver and gold, but what she gave was approved of more than all the large sums that perhaps had been thrown in the Lord's treasury for the poor."

"There is a class called Little Mites," said Polly, "in our school, but the richest girls are in it."

"The widow was not praised for giving so little," continued her grandmother, "but because she did all she could, honestly and generously, we believe; for our Saviour would have known it if it had been otherwise, and she then would not have been pointed out from all the crowd of high and low, rich and poor, that were passing by."

"I haven't even a mite," said Polly.

"You have health and strength, a comfortable home, and some person to care for you and provide for your wants. You cannot preach, you say, you have no money to give to the heathen; then God intends you to do missionary work in another way. There is Lucy, the blacksmith's child, who has not been outside of her house for a year—since she had her fall; and when you are coming in and going out, she sits there in the same place. Don't you believe, if you go and sit with her, and show her your books and papers, you would make her feel happier, and feel happier yourself too, for giving some of your time to her? And there is the blind old sailor who lives in the same house: suppose, some day, you offer to lead him to church—he has no one now to take him, and he cannot go alone. Perhaps this would be the means of leading him to Christ, and a great missionary work might be accomplished in that way. Or if you hear Jack, our neighbor's son, swearing on the stairs, as he sometimes does—for he has had no person to teach him that this is wrong—if you go to him kindly, and say, 'Jack, it would be better not to take God's name in vain,' speaking gently and humbly, not as if you were better than he, but as if you were trying to do right and wanted others to do so for the sake of our Saviour."

"Would that be being a missionary?" asked Polly, opening her eyes wider, and looking thoughtfully at the fire in the grate before her.

"Any work that is done to make men, women and children better, is missionary work; anything that is done in a Christian spirit to lead any one to the Saviour."

"If all the children in the school did that, I believe we would do more good than raising money," said Polly.

"We must do what we can; those who have money must help in that way, and if we haven't money, there are plenty of ways to help on the missionary work."

"I'll ask the old sailor to go with me next Sunday," said Polly decidedly. "I don't care if they do laugh when they see me coming in."

Polly kept her resolution, and began her missionary work by doing what she could. May all children do the same, and though the good result may never be seen in this world, it will all be revealed in the world to come.

Is there not around us all missionary work that we can do.—Methodist.

THE HIGHWAY TO SUCCESS.

Boys, would you be successful in life? Have you a desire to prosper in business and be wealthy? Are you anticipating the day when you may be men of influence and talent and influence in society, and be able to make your mark in the world? I am quite sure that my entire class of boys, as large as it may be, will answer me in the affirmative. How then are you to gain these successes? What made Mr. A. T. Stewart, the "merchant prince" of New York, successful in business? Let me tell you. He began business on a small scale, but he set out with a purpose. He gave strict attention to his business. He was true to this world in all his business transactions—never thought it policy to tell an untruth to make a dollar. He never misrepresented in trade. If he sold a cheap article, he sold it as such; if he sold a good article, he demanded a price corresponding with its value. By this means he not only made friends with his customers, but he kept what he made. By integrity, then, he secured friends, and friends brought him trade, and trade added hundreds and thousands, until he became one of the wealthiest merchants in the country. Some of you may have seen his marble palace, and extensive business block in New York city, and wondered at the beauty of architecture therein displayed.

It is not expected that all can be Stewarts, but all can be honest and honorable, and exercise the noble qualities of head and heart that have given him character and prominence as a business man. Whatever you do—in whatever branch of business you may in after years engage, let integrity be your guiding star.—Our School-day Visitor.

BAD BARGAINS.—Once a Sabbath-school teacher remarked that he who buys the truth, makes a good bargain; and inquired if any scholar recollected an instance in Scripture of a bad bargain.

"I do," replied a boy. "Esau made a bad bargain when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage."

A second said: "Judas made a bad bargain when he sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver."

A third boy observed: "Our Lord tells us that he makes a bad bargain who, to gain the whole world, loses his own soul."

I have seen a good many boys in my time who have made bad bargains. Some change the Sunday-school for the street; and home for wicked company; and the Bible for bad books; and health for tobacco. They always get the worst of it. Boys, look out for these bad bargains.

THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.

It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.

If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve them—by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flannels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with PICKSTONE'S Cleansing Crystal.

Sold by most respectable Grocers and Chemists, in Packets THREE CENTS EACH, sufficient for 20 Gallons of water, or Twelve for Thirty Cents, also in Boxes containing 144 Packets, price Three Dollars cash. ☞Be sure to ask for PICKSTONE'S Washing Crystal, as there are spurious imitations. Do not condemn it untried. Make one trial! PROTECTED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.
