Poetry.

THERE IS ANOTHER AND A BETTER WORLD!

BY B. C. LEECH.

Content! my soul, thy duties here pursue;
It won't be long, this life will soon be o'er.
And then the spirit freed, with grander view,
Shall on, still on, forever onward soar.

Held in this house of clay, confined below,
Oh! may we meekly here abide our time;
To us, O God! thy helping grace bestow;
Guide us, O Father! make us ever thine!

These aspirations! leaping, reaching far,
Ne'er satisfied with things of time and sense,
Looking above e'en distant moon and star,
To yonder brighter realms of recompense!

The rainbow smileth with celestial beams,
The gorgeous sunset scenes adorn the West,
The heavens glitter in the placid streams,
And forms of beauty dwell awhile our guest.

And shall these beauteous things forever fade?
Do they but mock us as they come and go?
Is this life all for which the soul was made?
Were we but destined for this world below?

Oh! there's a realm where beauty ne'er doth fade;
Eternal arches, rainbow-hued and bright;
Clouds, elysian splendor—skies for aye arrayed
With starry clusters, radiant with light.

There is a world, where loved ones gone before
Are sweeping golden harps of heavenly string;
Where friends, united, meet to part no more
Around God's throne, where joys eternal spring.

Miscellaneous.

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.

BY PERSIS.

Kate Wilmer was an only daughter. Her parents were pious, and from her earliest recollections she had been to the Sunday School. With the training and example of her pious parents, and the influence of her Sunday School teacher, she early became a child of God, and learned to serve the blessed Jesus.

But now a trial came to Kate, the first one in her life which she thought a real trouble. Her parents determined to leave the large and wealthy city in which they resided, and remove to the country. As they were desirous of giving Kate the advantage of an education, it was decided that she should remain in the city and continue her studies at the flourishing seminary of ——. For this purpose she was placed in care of the Principal, and her parents, with many prayers, bade adieu to their beloved child.

Kate soon became very happy in her new home, and was a general favorite with both teachers and scholars, with one exception among the latter.

There was a girl in the seminary, one of Kate's room-mates, who from the first seemed to dislike her, and no efforts of Kate could remove the unaccountable prejudice which she had conceived for her. There were also in the same room two other girls, both companions and class-mates of Kate and Julia (for such was the girl's name), and their preference for Kate had much to do with Julia's dislike for her.

One day Kate left her pen in her room, and asked permission of her teacher to go and get it. It was during the school hours, and the chambers were all deserted. Kate left the school room and bounded up the steps, humming her favorite Sunday School hymn, and went to the desk used by all the girls in the room for their books. Not finding her pen, she took up a book to look under it, from which dropped out a card. She was about to replace it, when her eye fell on her own name, and taking up the card she read a most shameful and untrue assertion; one of which Kate's pure mind had never dreamed, and at the bottom was written her name. The book was Julia's and the handwriting could not have been mistaken. She knew not what to do, and stood in amazement, with the card in her hand. As she stood trying to decide what course to pursue, her two room-mates and friends came in, and she showed them the card, asking their advice. They both agreed that Julia must have written it, with the intention of dropping it, to be read as if written by Kate, and advised her to keep it until recess, and show it to the wife of their teacher. She would not agree to their proposition, because she feared the consequences to Julia.

"Well," said one of the girls, "if you do not, I will, for I think she deserves to be punished," and taking the card from Kate's hand, she locked it in her trunk. When the hour for recess arrived, the two girls went to the wife of their teacher, and showing her the card, told the whole story; how and where it was found, who wrote it, &c.

"I will keep this," said she, "until your teacher comes in, and he shall know it all. I am sure he will not allow such conduct to go unpunished."

Poor Kate! how sad she felt, how she pitied Julia, and longed to beg for her, but she feared her teacher, for he was a stern and unyielding man, scrupulously exact in the administration of justice to those under his charge.

I do not say that Kate felt all love toward Julia, for there was much of human nature in her heart, yet she remembered that her great Example forgave his enemies when they were much more cruel than her's had been, and she thought of the prayer her mother had taught her infant lips to say, and which she now daily offered up—"Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us," and sought that spirit now from the heavenly Father.

That evening Kate, Julia and the two girls were summoned to his study by their teacher—Julia yet unaware that her sin had been found out. Drawing from his pocket the unfortunate card, he handed it to Julia, asking her to read it. She trembled so that she could scarcely hold the card, while her cheeks were crimson with fear and shame.

"Did you ever see that before?" he asked her quietly.

"No, sir," she replied, with her eyes resting on the floor, as if she dared not meet the searching gaze of her teacher.

He then told her the circumstances of its being found, and asserted that the handwriting was hers, assuring her that there was only one way to escape punishment, which was to confess her sin, tell her motive, and ask Kate's forgiveness.

"Oh, sir!" exclaimed Kate, "she has my forgiveness already, please do not make her ask it."

"I do not wish you to interfere with me, Kate," he replied almost harshly.

"I confess," said Julia, "that I wrote it, but I did not sign Kate's name, nor did I design to injure her character."

"Tell her so, then, and ask her pardon for having done a thing which might have ruined her," commanded the preceptor, "or you leave my school tomorrow, expelled."

After much hesitation she approached Kate and uttered the words as she had been commanded. Kate gladly assured her that she had already forgiven her, and was now rejoiced to learn that she had no design in what she had done, at the same time extending her hand. Julia accepted the proffered hand, but her grasp was far from being a cordial one. After talking a few minutes to the four girls, to Julia, particularly, in a kind and affectionate manner, the teacher knelt and sought God's blessing on the interview, and dismissed them. No sooner had they reached their own chamber than all of Julia's restrained passions burst forth.

"Yes, Kate Wilmer, I do hate you, and I wish I could ruin your character! Ask forgiveness, indeed! I only did it to save myself from expulsion, but I will show you how much of it was sincere, and how I scorn you."

All the ire Kate possessed was roused, and an angry reply was on her lips, but she kept it back and quietly left the room. She knew the recitation room would be unoccupied at that hour, and there she would be free from interruption. She opened the door noiselessly, and closing it after her, threw herself upon her knees, and wept and prayed for grace to conquer her angry passions. Could she ever speak kindly to Julia again? The tempter whispered, "No, I would never speak to her again." But the "still small voice" whispered, "love your enemies," and the picture of Jesus surrounded by his cruel foes, not only mocked but scourged and even spit upon—arose in her mind, and she asked:

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone—
And all the world go free?"

The struggle was long and severe, but when she sought her own chamber, there was a calm, sweet joy beaming in her countenance, and her schoolmates declared she never looked more lovely.

After that she was never once tempted into any unkind remark to Julia, but took particular pains to do for her every act of kindness in her power.

Julia at first scorned her offers of kindness, then received them with seeming condescension, and finally was overcome. Many, many long weeks and months rolled away before Kate could see the slightest cause to hope that Julia was touched by her conduct, but she persevered in praying for her soul, and ministering to her comfort, for Julia was very delicate, and as she was so peevish and exacting no one loved to wait upon her. Kate would often bring her books to Julia's bedside, and while she studied would fan her feverish brow or lay down her books every five minutes to arrange the pillows of the capricious invalid.

One night Julia had a sick headache, and Kate had been with her ever since tea, while the other girls were enjoying the recreation of Friday evening. They were alone, and Kate thinking she was asleep was about to creep out and join the girls, when she called her.

"Kate," said she, "let me say a few words to you, and you may go. I do not deserve your kindness, but rather the worse treatment in the world. Please forgive me for all I have done to you, and you do not know half that I have done. I am sincere now, though I was not once. Kate can you forgive one who has done so much to injure you?"

"Oh, yes," said Kate, "I have forgiven you long ago, but there is one whose pardon is of more importance than mine. You have sinned against him much more grievously than against me. Have you sought his forgiveness?"

"Can there be any hope for me?" she asked.

"Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out," slowly repeated Kate.

"And will you help me to ask him?"

"Most gladly; let us ask him now," and kneeling by the bed of the weeping girl, Kate offered a simple, childlike prayer, which was wafted to the mercy-seat, and that same night the angels rejoiced over one repenting sinner..

From that time forth Julia and Kate were firm friends, Julia living the life of an humble Christian.

She often declared that nothing but such treatment as she received from Kate could ever have brought her to repentance, and to see how very wicked she was.

But my story is not done yet. There was from that time an interest in religion awakened, which spread through the whole school and the church to which Kate belonged. A revival of religion began from that circumstance, and scores of persons experienced peace in believing, and found Christ precious to their souls. Kate is now the wife of a devoted minister of the gospel, and is as useful as her childhood promised she would be, a joy to her husband, a pillar in the church, an ornament to society, and an humble Sunday School worker. She yet remembers the seminary, and her trial and triumph with pleasure.

Julia was soon almost as much loved as Kate, and so great was the change in her life that it was noticed by every one. Not long after she graduated with great honor. God took her to himself and she died in the triumph of faith, blessing Kate with her latest breath.

HIGHER LIFE.

A few days ago, in the country, I stood beneath a tall cedar, a student of nature and an admirer of its glory, I observed that the lower branches showed the only signs of decay; and that they seemed to be appointed for removal, in order that the sap of the tree might pass uninterruptedly upward to develope the higher boughs, and to hold up the top in full evergreen. The trunk of the cedar is made the more grand and substantial by the disappearance of the lower branches year by year, and the avenues to communicate life and beauty upward are thus the more direct and effectual.

And so does the Christian grow. The habits of his childhood, embryo notions and opinions, as he rises into manhood, are lost; and like the cedar, as he grows, his lower affections and attachments, love of the world, of fame, of position, one by one die and disappear, and his higher nature is all the more comely and complete. Any man may thus die unto sin and live unto God, loose his attachments from the things of time and sense, and fix them upon those things which are eternal and divine.—Clarke's "Gospel in the Trees."

THE HONEST IRISH BOY.—There was a lad in Ireland, who was put to work at a linen factory, and while he was at work there, a piece of cloth was wanted to be sent out which was short of the quantity it ought to be; but the master thought it might be made the length by a little stretching. He thereupon unrolled the cloth, taking hold of one end himself, and the boy at the other. He then said, "Pull, Adam, pull." "I cannot sir." "Why?" said the master. "Because it is wrong, sir," said Adam, and he refused to pull. Upon this, the master said he would not do for a linen manufacturer, and sent him home; but that boy became the learned Rev. Dr. Adam Clarke.

WEDDINGS A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—It may be of interest to know how they arranged marriages a hundred years ago. An old paper has the following description bearing upon the subject:—"Married in June, 1760, Mr. William Doukin, a considerable farmer, of Great Lassin (near Northbury) in the County of Cumberland, to Miss Eleanor Stotten, an agreeable young gentlewoman, of the same place. The entertainment of this occasion was very grand, there being no less than one hundred and twenty quarters of lamb, forty-four quarters of veal, twenty quarters of mutton, and a great quantity of beef; twelve hams, with a suitable number of chickens, etc., which was concluded with eight hampers of brandy made into punch, twelve dozen of cider, a great many gallons of wine, and ninety bushels of malt made into beer. The company consisted of five hundred and fifty ladies and gentlemen, who concluded with the music of twenty-five fiddlers and pipers, and the whole was conducted with the utmost order and unanimity."

CAUTION! CAUTION! CAUTION!

THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.
It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.
If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure,
