IN COMPANY.

"We took sweet counsel together, and walked to th house of God in company."

Sweet was the sound of the Sabbath bells
Filling the perfumed air;
And glad were our spirits with holy joy
As we walked to the house of prayer.
And we said, as we looked in each others eyes,
"Will the King come near to-day?"
And the glance that we sent to the far-off hills
Said, "Come, Lord, do not delay."

Close, and warm, and long was the clasp
Of hands that were true and kind,
And we heard the murmurings—soft with joy—
Of friends before and behind
But He came nearest—the best of all—
Blessing us silently;
And we hid in our hearts what He said to us,
Though we walked in company.

Never were skies more brightly blue,
Nor the birds' songs e'er so sweet;
So tender we grew that we even loved
All people who walked the street;
"Do they know him—our gracious Lord?" thought we,
And we saw in many a face
The look they catch who have found His peace,
And tasted His wondrous grace.

The house was filled with His glory-light,
As we passed through the open door,
And our souls grew still with the rapturous joy
As we knelt on the hallowed floor.
Clear was the message that came from God,
As his name through the temple rang;
And thrilling the song that rose to heaven
When familiar voices sang.

Greater still is the company
Now than in bygone years,
But the greeting eyes that sparkled then
Are becoming dim with tears
For one by one the old, old friends
Have passed to their home away,
And in the temple not made with hands,
Are keeping the Sabbath-day.

Our hearts go out to the happy young
Thronging our Zion's gate,
Who love the courts of the house of God,
And are eager to pray and wait.
But we are a little glad to know.
We shall leave them ere very long,
To do the work we have left undone,
While we rest with the ransomed throng.

For then we shall have it all again—
The peace of the Sabbath-days—
And the hidden rapture of those whose hearts
Are filled with the Saviour's praise.
We weary sometimes for the dear ones gone,
And we know we shall Jesus see,
When we walk together in that fair land,
In the same sweet company.

"WHERE SHALL I FIND A GOOD GUIDE?"

BY L. D. B.

I remember once hearing the above question asked by a boy in a printing-office. The "guide" he wanted is an article used by printers to keep the copy in place, and to direct the eye to the right line of the copy. The question was a simple one, but it set me musing. I had seen the boy, a few days previous, trust himself to the guidance of one, who, though much older than himself, sought only to lead him into paths of error, and to the haunts of vice. "Ah!" thought I, "you do sadly need a good guide. Destitute of religious and with very little moral home influence, where will you find one?" I thought, too, that it was the cry of humanity from the earliest dawning of intellect till death closes the scene, though the definition of good is varied by the wants or conditions of mind, each seeking one that can assist him in his particular difficulty. The little child, in its efforts to learn to walk, will not willingly trust itself a second time to the guidance of one who is careless or rough. Instinctively it feels that such an one is not a good guide.

Whatever path in life is followed, a guide is necessary to instruct us in the way. The student seeks instructors who thoroughly understand what they attempt to teach. He who would become skilled in any of the mechanical arts must be taught by a master-workman.

And in times of temptation - such as come sometimes in every life—when the evil in our hearts joins with the evil surrounding us, to lead us from right and truth, against our judgment, and almost against our will, how does the soul shrick out for a guide—for some one to take us by the hand and lead us aright, or to speak a word of encouragement to us in our struggle. Sad, indeed, is it for the soul that at such a time has no one to point it to the only Guide that never leads astray. I thank God that the Holy Spirit does not always wait for human agency, when a soul is struggling with sin and temptation, but acts through its own influence upon the heart. Still, it is his usual way to work through his people. Let us then, be ever watchful for the opportunity to point the soul to Christ; and let those of us who are called to teach the young, endeavor to so press upon the minds and hearts of our pupils the love of the Saviour for them, and his ability to lead through every difficulty, that they may be constrained to take him for their guide through life. Let us teach them that he not only is able, but that he delights to lead those that will seek him into the way of life. That was what he came to earth and gave up his life for.

PETER THE PLOUGHBOY.

"I wonder if I shall have to be a ploughboy all my life?"

"Yes, most likely you will. Why not? Doesn't it suit you? Do you want to be a gentleman?"

Peter did not mean to think aloud, and so he blushed and felt rather uncomfortable when he found that he had done so, and that his father had heard him. And, seeing this, his father laughed at him.

"It is a bad sign, Peter, when a boy does not like his work. Don't you like yours?"

"Oh, yes, father, I like it very well, but I should not like to think that I shall have to keep to such work all my life."

"It is healthy work, Peter."

"Yes, father, I know it is, and I think it is more pleasant to be out here in the fresh air than in one of those close factories in the town yonder. But still the wages are not very good, and for many reasons I should like to be something better."

"Ah, my boy, I don't see how you are going to manage that."

Neither indeed did Peter, but he meant to try.

As he was always working out of doors, mostly with his father, he had what is a great blessing if boys only knew it—plenty of time to think. And he thought a great deal. And Peter was of an inquiring mind. He wanted to know about everything. He felt a great desire to learn the names of all the wild flowers that grew in the hedges, and the fields where he worked. He was greatly interested too in the caterpillars and butterflies, which at different seasons of the year he found upon the oak and other trees. He did know pretty well where to look for birds' nests, and what kind of eggs, and how many in number he would find belonging to certain birds. Sometimes too, especially in the harvest time, he found hundreds of little mice, and wondered about them. For the little that Peter knew stimulated his curiosity, and made him want to know more still. And so the one great wish of Peter's heart at the time when his father heard him think aloud was for education.

"If I could only learn, I would not care what else I had to do," thought Peter many times during the day. And when it is really the case that a boy is so much in earnest that he is willing to do as well as to wish there is great probability that he will have what he wants.

Peter's master noticed that he seemed very attentive to his work, and tried to do it well. He also noticed that he looked out for the flowers and insects and other things that were to be found at different seasons of the year. And he began to take an interest in the boy. One day, when Peter was diligently driving the horses he looked up and saw the gentleman's eyes fixed upon him.

Peter blushed, as he had a habit of doing when spoken to by those above him.

"Can you read, Peter?"

"Yes, sir, a little."

"What do yon mean by a little?"

"I mean that I cannot read as well as I should like to, sir, for I do not know how to pronounce some of the hard words that I find in books."

"Would you like to learn?"

"Oh, yes, indeed, sir. I should be very thankful to learn."

"Well, I think my sister will teach you for an hour or so during these winter evenings if you will come up to the house."

You may be sure that Peter went, and as the lady taught him to write as well as read that was his first step toward being something better than a ploughboy.

His master lent him plenty of good and useful books, so whenever Peter had ten minutes that he might call his own he always had a book in his hand which he was striving to understand.

The book that delighted him the most was a History of England. As he read of the noble deeds that have been done in our country his heart glowed, and he felt glad to belong to such a nation. He grew to love the very name of England, and to long to do something for his land and his people.

He used sometimes to talk to his master about what he thought and felt and so his master gave him another name than Peter the Plough boy, and it was Peter the Patriot.

He was very fortunate in finding kind friends able and willing to help him. But God was watching over the poor boy. And He put it into the heart of some gentlemen to send Peter to college.

He made good use of his opportunities there. He did not mind how hard he worked, and one thing that Peter was very particular about was never to do things by halves, and so whatever he pretended to do was always well done. And so before he had been very long there he got yet another name, and that was Peter the Professor. You see, boys, that you are not compelled to remain in your present position. There is a very true saying that you have perhaps heard before—"God helps those who help themselves," and Peter is only another proof of that truth.

SWALLOWING FIFTEEN COWS.

"Swallowed fifteen cows!" said Bertie, in astonishment, looking up from her play. Her ears had caught the words in a conversation that was going on in the room.

"Yes," answered her brother George, "he drank them all up."

"Drank fifteen cows! I don't believe it!" answered the little maiden, firmly.

"He sold them and bought whisky and beer with the money," explained her aunt Katy.

"Oh, oh! that was it. I see now. Well, it is funny."

"No, not funny, dear, but sad," said aunt Katy. "The man had a wife and two little children, and he sold the milk from the fifteen cows and bought them food and clothing. But now, having swallowed the cows, as we were saying, his wife and children go hungry and cold, and he, a poor miserable drunkard, is in the almshouse. Isn't it dreadful to think of?"

The children looked very sober.

"You'll never catch me drinking up fifteen cows, nor one, either," spoke out George, very positively.

"I don't know as to that," said Aunt Kate. "The man we are talking about was once a boy like you, with a healthy taste for food and clear cold water. As to ever swallowing a cow, much more fifteen cows, such a thing never entered his head.

But you see what he came to at last. How was it? He began by taking a glass of ale or beer, or a little wine, at parties, now and then. This corrupted his pure taste and gave him an unnatural thirst, which only strong drink would satisfy. From ale and beer he went to whisky, rum and brandy; and the more and oftener he drank, the more his thirst increased, until he became a poor miserable drunkard. So you see, George, that no boy can tell what he may come to. Maybe, instead of swallowing fifteen cows, you will get down, one of these days, after you become a man, forty or fifty and a house into the bargain."

"Now, Aunty, that is too bad!" exclaimed George. "You know I won't."

"So hundreds and thousands of little boys might once have said, who, now that they have grown to be men, are drunkards. There is only one way of safety."

"What is that, Aunty?" asked the boy looking up with serious eyes.

"It is the way of total abstinence, as we call it—the only way of safety for boys or men. If you never drink a drop of intoxicating liquor, you will never be a drunkard. If you depart from this rule, no man can say to how low a depth of wretchedness and degradation you may fall. The worst drunkard in the land was once a pure and innocent boy."

"I'll never swallow even a calf!" said George, starting up and speaking with great earnestness.

"Touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing," said Aunt Kate, "and all will be well with you. But indulge ever so little in drinking as you grow to manhood, and none can tell into what a great deep of hopeless ruin you may fall."

In the latest edition of "Carpenter's Physiology," it is mentioned that out of three hundred and fifty-nine idiots in England, the condition of whose progenitors could be ascertained, ninety-nine were children of absolute drunkards, and a large proportion of the parents of the remainder were more or less intemperate. Of the three hundred and fifty-nine idiots, seventeen were the children of parents nearly related by blood.

EIGHT REASONS FOR INSURING YOUR LIFE IN THE STAR LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—1. Because it has been established for twenty-six years, a period which is a sufficient test of its stability.
2. Because it has on its Board gentlemen who are known never to lend their influence to an undertaking which is not conducted with the greatest integrity.
3. Because it refers to gentlemen of the greatest eminence in every country, who are ready to vouch for its high position.
4. Because it has put by a large Reserve Fund, $5,000,000, which of itself is more than enough to meet every contingency.
5. Because the Bonuses which have been declared, notwithstanding so large a sum has been put by in reserve, are larger than many offices of similar condition.
6. Because its annual income has hitherto been more than three times the amount of claims which are annually provided for.
7. Because it gives Assurers in addition all those advantages which are made the especial features of other offices.
8. Because it has deposited with the Receiver General $100,000 as a guarantee to Canadian Policy-holders, that all claims will be met with promptitude, and in good faith.
