Poetry.

THE ONLY STANDARD.

Who shall judge a man from manners?
  Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
  Princes fit for something less;
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
  May be clothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thought and feeling—
  Satin vests could do no more.

There are springs of crystal nectar
  Every welling out of stone;
There are purple buds and golden
  Hidden, crushed, and overgrown;
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
  Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones the highest,
  But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, unpraised above his fellows,
  Oft forgets his fellows then:
Masters, rulers, lords, remember
  That your meanest hinds are men;
Men by honor, men by feeling,
  Men by thought, and men by fame,
Claiming equal right to sunshine,
  In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam-embroidered oceans,
  There are little weed-clad rills;
There are feeble inch-high saplings,
  There are cedars on the hills;
God, who counts by souls not stations,
  Loves and prospers you and me,
For to Him all famed distinctions
  Are as pebbles in the sea.

Truth and Justice are eternal,
  Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
  While there is a sunny right;
God, whose world-heard voice is singing
  Boundless love to you and me,
Sinks oppression, with its titles,
  As the pebbles in the sea.

SAM BARKER.—THE INCORRIGIBLES.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MASTER AND PUPIL."

It is now fifteen years since I taught the Sabbath school class which my friend Hammond was pleased to design "The Incorrigibles." He was a member of our pastor's Bible class; and at the request of the Superintendent, became my substitute one Sunday when I was confined to the house by illness.

His report to me of his labors was interesting;—they had been "labors" indeed. All the boys except little Holman had been exceedingly troublesome. They had recited well, and so the new teacher had finished hearing the lesson in good season; but that over, the class had devoted themselves almost en masse, to mischief. There were ten of them. Poor Hammond's gentle remonstrances,—he is a mild-spoken gentleman with kindly blue eye,—had proved utterly futile; and the boys had almost literally walked over him.

"You know, Miss Kinsley," said he to me, "that I am naturally very patient; but I must tell you that I was so wrought upon by Sam Barker's defiant disorder, that my fingers ached to give the boy a good caning. He deserved it; and it is my opinion that if the rod and he were better acquainted, not only your class but society in general would be benefited by the intimacy."

I laughed at his earnestness, and shook my head. "I have faith in Sam," said I. "I grant you that he is a great trial. Why, sir, he has brought to Sunday-school at different times, to my knowledge, tamarinds, preserved ginger, dates, whole cocoa, pea-nuts, apples, candy, peaches, prunes, marbles, old leather, old brass, spring-clothes-pins, clay pipes, negro song-books, and other articles in almost endless variety;—of course, for his own amusement and that of his comrades. But now-a-days, I politely request him to take a seat in the slip with me, and empty his pockets before I begin to hear the lesson. He always complies good-naturedly, for he is the very essence of good-nature; and so we get along finely till the close of the session. Did you notice Gould?"

"Yes. He's a good Bible-scholar, but sly as a fox. I caught him sticking pins into one of the Smith boys, while he was reciting to me the twentieth Psalm."

"And the Smith boys. How did they behave?"

"Tyler Smith,—he's the elder of the two if I remember right, did very well for about three quarters of an hour; and his brother George kept quiet for fifteen minutes; but from the time the exercises commenced till they closed, Sam Barker and John Wright made a Fourth of July of it. John had some sweet fern cigars—"

"You don't mean to say that he smoked them?"

"O, no. But he divided them about among the boys; and Sam Barker had a bird's head and beak which he held in his closed hand, and, slipping his arm over the back of the seat, managed to keep Norton scowling and fidgeting all through the session. He pulled the boy's hair, and tickled his neck, and nipped his ears, till I felt obliged to suspend the hearing of the lesson, and read the offender a short sermon upon behaviour in Sunday school. He cast down his eyes, and blushed; but in less than five minutes he was at his tricks again. He is a hard case, I'm afraid."

"Yes, so he is, in the sense that he's roguish: but, Mr. Hammond, he is not a vicious boy, and he has really a very tender heart. You see I know him better than you do, for I've had trials with him. Oh! Mr. Hammond, there's nothing like hunting out the good in a wicked or troublesome boy, and then letting him understand that you have faith in it."

I have always been glad that I believed in Sam Barker.

Sam did not know much about the Bible. His father followed the seas, and his mother was not a religious woman. But Gould, the English boy, and little Holman, had been well instructed in the Scriptures; and after we had concluded the recitation from the text-book, I used to question the boys in Bible history, illustrating truth by stories borrowed from my own experience or that of others, and requesting them to commit to memory certain brief passages for the next Sunday. Sam never failed me, whether the others were ready or not.

I had taught The Incorrigibles for about a year, when little Holman sickened and died. He was a good boy, and invariably quiet and attentive; the only boy in the class except one—Taylor—whom I had never been obliged to reprove for neglected lessons, want of punctuality, inattention or disorder.

We all went to his funeral, and poor Sam left a beautiful white rose upon his coffin when he came out.

It was like the boy, for he had a large, generous, loving heart; and I saw by his tears that day—which, by the way, Gould ridiculed afterwards—that Holman's gentleness had won his affection as it had mine.

On one or two very rainy Sabbaths, I had Sam all to myself. Then I had talked with him very earnestly, urging upon him his duty with regard to exerting a good influence upon his classmates. I had told him as simply as I could what claims God had upon him, and then pressed home the obligation he was under to his Saviour. He always melted at the story of the cross; and though I saw no lasting effects follow these personal labors, I still had faith to believe that ultimately they would bear fruit.

Just before Sam joined the army—for he became a soldier—he came to see me in my new home at M——. He thanked me for the interest I had felt in him while he was a member of my class, and told me that he had voluntarily taken a pledge not to use tobacco or spirituous liquor in any form while absent at the seat of war. "You see, Miss Kinsley," said he, "I could have gone off with the boys without putting my name to paper, and meant all the same to keep clear of temptation; but I remember what you told us all so often, that our good resolutions would'nt amount to anything without God's aid. So I thought it best to write down my determination, and add, 'So help me God!' and I think, Miss Kinsley, that he will help me. Folks say that this war is going to be the ruin of young men's morals; but I'm going to try and see if I can't come back,—if I come back at all,—better than I went."

When Sam came back, it was as a Christian; and he is to-day an earnest worker in the Lord's vineyard.

Ah! one can not always predict what is to be the future of this or that member of a Sunday school class! The roughest and least promising may be "chosen vessels," elected unto honor; while those that seem fairest and worthiest may prove utterly worthless for the Master's use.

I can not close this little sketch without recording that my Bible scholar who laughed at poor Sam's sorrow over little Holman, was not long afterwards arrested for the larceny of a neighbor's fruit, and sentenced to a fine or imprisonment in the House of Correction. His father paid the fine, and the family soon removed to the West. I have never heard from them since; but I trust Anson Gould's experience of the "way of the transgressor" may have brought home to his heart more deeply the Scripture truths with which his lips were so familiar; and that he too has become a follower of the Lord. I can not give up hope in the case of a single one of my "Incorrigibles." I still believe that the seed sown in faith so long ago will yet bear abundant fruit to the honor and glory of God. "Let thy mercy, O God! be upon us, according as we hope in thee."

LOVING THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

"John, where are you going?" asked Sam, one fine Sabbath morning.

"I'm going to the Sabbath school."

"Pshaw! I wouldn't do any such thing this pleasant morning," shouted Ben.

"Come with us. We are going to have a boat ride, get some lilies and blackberries—they are thick over in Swan's meadow—and—"

"Yes, come with us," broke in Sam. "I go to the Sabbath school, but what is the use of being so nice? A fellow wants to enjoy himself once in a while, on such a nice day as this. Come, go with us to-day, and I will go with you next Sabbath. That's fair."

"That would not be remembering the Sabbath day and keeping it holy."

"He's a minister, isn't he, Sam?" said Ben sneeringly, just so that John could hear him.

"I think something of the Sabbath school," responded John boldly. "It has done a good deal for me; and I wouldn't leave it and go with you if you would give me five pounds. Besides it is a great deal pleasanter than it would be to go out to Swan's pond and get drowned."

"Ha! ha! ha! You don't dare to go," said Ben.

"That's so every time," chimed in Sam. "He is joined to his idols, let him alone;" and they ran for the pond in high glee, laughing at John's sticking to his Sabbath school; but it would have been better for the boys if they had gone with him.

They went to the pond, found a leaky boat, and went out after their lilies. They got all they wished, and then started across the pond to get some blackberries. They were so busy getting berries that they did not notice a gathering shower until they were in the middle of the pond, when they saw it sweeping down upon them. They were frightened, and tried to hurry ashore, but was too late. It soon burst upon them, the rain pouring in torrents, the wind lashed the waves into foam, and tossing the boat like an egg-shell; it capsized, and poor Ben went to the bottom, and Sam escaped death by getting on the boat, and clinging to it for several hours until it drifted ashore.

John went to the Sunday school thinking of the boys, but not in the least regretting his choice, especially when they were talking about Christ stilling the tempest, and the storm came upon them. He could not help saying, "We are safe with Christ; but O! where are the boys without Christ to still the tempest?"

The next Sabbath Sam was at the Sabbath school with John, but poor Ben's body was lying in Swan's pond.

"O," says Sam, "you were right, John. The more we make of the Sabbath school the more it will do for us. If poor Ben had made as much of it as you did, he might have been here to-day."

"Yes," said John; "I had learned to prize it before I knew its value. This is not the first time it has saved my life; and what is better, I trust it has saved my soul."

Sam never forgot the lesson. He soon found the Saviour precious, and ever afterwards esteemed the Sabbath school. He often said, "We cannot prize it too highly."—Picture Magazine.

COLORS IN A HORSE.—The following story is said to illustrate the Arab's estimate of different colors in a horse: A chief of the tribe was once pursued by enemies. He said to his son, "My son drop to the rear and tell me the color of the horses of our foe and may Alla burn his grandfather!" "White," was the answer. "Then we will go south," said the chief, "for in the vast plains of the desert the wind of the white horse cannot stand the protracted chase." Again the chief said, "My son what colored horses pursue us?" "Black O, my father!" "Then we will go among the stones and rocky ground, for the feet of the black horses are not strong." A third time the young Arab was sent to the rear, and reported chestnut horses. "Then said the chief, "we are lost. Who but Allah can deliver us from the chestnut!" Dun or cream colored horses the Arabs consider worthless.

PERSEVERANCE.—Boys and girls, perseverance in whatever is right, let that be your motto, and you will become great and good. When I was a child our teacher used often to sing with us,

"If at first you don't succeed,
  Try, try again."

Sing this to yourself when you feel discouraged about your lessons, because you think you cannot recite them perfectly, and when you are writing in your copy-book, and make blots and crooked letters. If thus you "try, try again," at last you will conquer.

And so it is in trying each day to be good: first ask God, for Christ's sake, to help you, and then in his strength persevere to the end.—American Messenger.

THE NATIONAL
Life Insurance Company
OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

WAS Chartered by Congress, in 1868, with a capital of ONE MILLION DOLLARS, every dollar of which was paid in before commencing business.

This capital is four times as large as that of any American Company doing a Life Insurance business exclusively. Beside this immense capital, the Company have invested a premium reserve to meet maturing Policies of seven hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars, making their total assets to January 1st, 1881, one million seven hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars. Their liabilities to same date were $807,389, or in other words, they have more than two dollars assets for every dollar of liabilities. This success is owing to the facts that their business is conducted upon the only common sense plan—"so much insurance for so much money"—and that the Company's financial management has been economical and cautious.

In this Company there are none of the bewildering uncertainties and disappointments of "notes," "dividends," &c., &c., &c., which enter so largely into the business plans of Mutual Companies. The insured buy what they pay for—Insurance. They are not called upon to insure others, but they are insured by the Company.

Instead of charging thirty per cent. more than is necessary to cover possible losses, the National charges the net cost of Insurance and risks its capital to cover any extra mortality. Mutual Companies MAY not need to use this extra thirty per cent.; in that case it is returned to the Policy-holder and mis-called a "Dividend." The National does not need any extra guarantee, its capital being sufficient, and consequently its rates are from 25 to 30 per cent. lower than those of Mutual Companies.

The National's Policies are more liberal than any issued in the Provinces, allowing residence or travel anywhere in temperate climates. No extra Premiums, Policy-fees, Permits, or extra charges, except upon the half-dozen occupations generally recognized as EXTRA hazardous.

The National is the only Company which has made the required deposit at Ottawa for the SOLE benefit of Canadian Policy-holders. All others are for "POLICY-HOLDERS GENERALLY."

Five cents per day will insure a young man a thousand dollars, IN GOLD, payable to him at the age of sixty, or to his representatives should he die sooner. Four cents a day will insure a man, aged 25, for one thousand dollars, payable to his wife or children at his death, wherever that may occur. What easier way is there to make such a provision? Is it not worth your while to investigate?

Agencies are established throughout the Lower Provinces where the fullest information will be cheerfully given. Should there be none to whom you can conveniently apply, a note addressed to the General Agent at St. John, will be promptly answered. Address

CARR'S PATENT CANT DOG.

THE advantages of CARR'S PATENT are—
1st. Simplicity and Utility combined. The bolt and nut, which are often working loose, being entirely dispensed with.
2nd. The Connection being low, the Dog never fails catching the log.
3rd. The width of the band gives additional strength to the Stock.
4th. It is the most Durable and Cheapest Dog now in use.
The subscriber having purchased the Patent Right of the above Cant Dog from James Carr, begs to inform all Lumbermen, Mill Owners and Wharf Builders, that he will have a Stock manufactured and will be able to supply any quantity after the middle of February. A sample may be seen at Subscriber's Store, and orders received so as to ensure an early delivery. Lumbermen, before fitting out, will please call and examine this Dog, as it will save them both in expense and labor. W. H. THORNE,
