

YOUNG LOCHINVAR: A SONG.
(FROM SCOTT'S MARRIAGE.)

O Young Lochinvar is come out of the West,
Through all the wide border his steed was the best,
And save his good broad sword, he weapons had none;
He rode all unarmed, and he rode all alone.
So faithful in love and so dauntless in war,
There never was knight like the young Lochinvar.

He said not for brake and he stopped not for stone;
He swam the Elke River where ford there was none;
But ere he alighted at Netherby Gate
The bridge had consented, the gallant came late;
For a laggard in love and a dastard in war,
Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar.

So boldly he entered the Netherby Hall
Among bridesmen and kinsmen and brothers and all;
Then spoke the bride's father, his hand on his sword
(For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word)
"O come ye in peace here, or come ye in war,
Or to dance at our bridal young Lord Lochinvar."

"I long wooed your daughter, my suit you denied;
Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide—
And now I am come, with this lost love of mine,
To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
There are maidens in Scotland, more lovely by far
That would gladly be bride to the young Lochinvar.

The bride kissed the goblet, the knight took it up,
He quaffed off the wine and he threw down the cup.
She looked down to blush, and she looked up to sigh
With a smile on her lips, and a tear in her eye,
He took her soft hand ere her mother could bar;
"Now lead we a measure" said young Lochinvar.

So stately his form and so lovely her face,
That never a hall such a galliard did grace;
While her mother did frow and her father did fume,
And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet and plume,
And the bride maids whispered, "'Twere better by far
To have matched our fair cousin with young Lochinvar."

One touch to her hand, and one word to her ear,
When they reached the hall door and the charger stood near;
So light to the eroup the fair Lady he swung!
So light to the saddle before her he sprung!
"She is won! We are gone over bank, bush and scur
"They'll have fleet steeds that follow" quoth young Lochinvar.

There was mounting 'mong Graemes of the Netherby clan:
Forslers, Fenwicks and Mulgraves, they rode and they ran:
There was racing and chafing on Cannobie lee;
But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they see.
So daring in love and so dauntless in war,
Have ye e'er heard of gallant like young Lochinvar?

LONDON, AUGUST 4.

A proclamation from the Royal Chamber (Consulado) of Commerce of Cadiz has been addressed to the Merchants of that City, dated the 4th ult. in which, after having demonstrated to them the sacred ties and reciprocal duties existing between the State and the Citizens, which oblige them both to assist each other in their urgencies it places under their eyes the situation in which the perfidy of the French Government has involved them, and draws as the consequence, that the greatest efforts are to be made by them to extricate themselves from it. It proceeds to shew, that without great sums the war cannot effectually be carried on; and that in consequence of the exorbitant wants, the Supreme Junta of Seville addressed the Royal Chamber of Commerce on the 30th of June, directing them to open a voluntary loan of two millions of hard dollars, at the most favourable premiums, the Supreme Junta binding themselves to pay capital and interest in two years, and in two equal payments; out of the revenues of the Customs of Cadiz, expecting that the loyal inhabitants of Cadiz, who had shewn themselves so liberal in far less pressing circumstances, would now come forward, notwithstanding the state of depression in which commerce had been so long plunged.—The Chamber of Commerce therefore, in virtue of the powers granted them by the Junta, declared the opening of the loan, allowing 22 per cent. per ann. interest, and the interest to be paid every six months. They further pledged themselves, that if the payments could be made sooner, it should be done. The Proclamation concludes by expressing the necessity of such a loan, and that if sacrifices were now to be made, they would contribute to prevent much greater ones, which would certainly take place, should the enemies of their country succeed in their unprincipled attack.

CANINE SYMPATHY.—The following Narrative is given by a gentleman of respectability, living at Stoke Green, near Windsor:—

"On Wednesday last my groom went to Windsor on horseback, accompanied by three dogs, two pointers, and a terrier; on his return, within about half a mile of home, the horse on which he rode took fright, threw him, and ran home, attended by two of the dogs, the terrier and one pointer: the appearance of the horse at home without the man, naturally excited in the hearts of the other servants an apprehension that some accident had befallen him, and two of them, a man and woman, went in quest of him; after searching in vain about two hours in the lane which is in the direct road from hence to Windsor, they were induced to look into the cross road, whither they went through a field; whilst in the field, the man called the groom's name aloud, which was answered by the barking of a dog. The woman observing that she thought it the voice of the dog which had not come home, they directed their course to the spot whence the voice proceeded. As soon as they got into the lane, they perceived a dog at a distance making towards them, which proved to be the very dog. Upon coming up to them, he discovered alternate symptoms of joy and uneasiness, and ran before them, as if desirous of shewing them the cause. They followed, when lo! he conducted them to the spot where lay the man in a ditch by the road side, apparently lifeless. They dragged him along home, and laid him in a bed, the dog staying with him the whole time, and by a whining noise discovering his anxiety. The persons who were in the room made several attempts to turn the dog out, but without success; they were at length to won by the creature's manners, that they allowed him to remain, when he at length placed himself on the man's bed, and watched him with the most painful anxiety, and as he groaned, so did the dog mourn, proportioning the height and duration of his voice to that of the man; nor did he quit the bed until twelve o'clock of the following day, when the man seemed restored to his senses! What is more remarkable is, that from the time he was laid upon the bed, the man was alternately affected with a stupor or total insensibility, and a most ungovernable frenzy, and in the latter state directed his violence to the poor animal, treating him most unmercifully, but the dog would not leave him."
