A NOTED FORGER'S RELEASE.

The Story of an English Member of Parliament who Destroyed his Father's Will.

[From the Montreal Gazette.]

William Roupell, once Member for Parliament for Lambeth, who, fourteen years ago, was found guilty of forgery and sentenced to penal servitude for life, has lately, by a special act of mercy on the part of Her Majesty, been released from imprisonment. Both from the position of the criminal and the circumstances under which the crime was committed, the case attracted much attention at the time; but, during the nearly half generation which has since elapsed, even the name of the unfortunate man had almost been effaced from the public memory. Many persons, however, will be able to recall the sensation which was caused when the forgery was discovered.

Roupell was the eldest and illegitimate son of wealthy parents, who married subsequently to his birth. In his will, his father had bequeathed his large property to the second son, who was the eldest born in wedlock. William found an opportunity of destroying this will and forged another, by which the property was left to his mother and he was appointed sole executor. The deed accomplished, his conscience seems to have allowed him no peace of mind, and, in his restlessness and recklessness, he eagerly squandered estate after estate. At last he confessed his crime, but by his confession he only shifted the consequences of it from one set of victims to another; and those to whom he had sold the property which was not his, became the losers. His family regained their rights, but those who had advanced him purchase money for estates sold by him under false titles, suffered by his deceit. When he appeared in the dock to receive sentence, he sought for no mercy, assuring the Judge who condemned him that his sole deesire was to atone, as far as possible, for the evil which he had done. In prison, at Portland, his conduct was exemplary. He devoted all his faculties to the relief of the sick and weak and administered such consolation as he could to the dying. Thus, wholly resigned to his lot, counting himself happy to be able to turn to any use a life so drearily overshadowed, he fulfilled the term of fourteen years. Sentenced for life to exile from the world which had known him, he seemed to have no wish to escape from his lot. When, some time ago, the Prince of Wales visited the establishment at Portland, he evinced a deep interest in Roupell's case, and engaged, if possible, to effect his emancipation. But the sad prisoner gently and thankfully declined his promised aid, and expressed his determination to end his days in the same monotonous seclusion, lightened only by the consciousness that he was trying to make some amends for the past. Since then the Queen has intimated her gracious pleasure that he should be set free, and now he comes forth.

To Beginners in Stock-Raising.

Dr. G. Sprague, in the Western Farmer, gives the following sensible advice to young men about to commence breeding stock with a view of making the business a permanent one:

1. In buying improved cattle, hogs, or other stock, the two leading requisites are, a good animal, with a good pedigree. Be sure you have the former, but without the latter buy low.

2. If your intention is to breed reputable animals for sale as breeders, and to stand before the public as a breeder of thoroughbreds, take counsel carefully, and be sure that you get an animal having merit, and a respectable pedigree with it. Pay for both and be sure you get both.

3. Always aim to keep a bull of higher breeding than your females, but make sure of individual merit in the animal.

4. Be cautious about buying animals, young or old, that have been fed high on corn or meal. There is great danger of suspending the breeding capacity, and shortening the period of usefulness by such feeding. Ground oats, shorts, bran, oil cake, roots, grass and hay are safe to use, and a sixth to a tenth part of corn meal may be used with these. Feed so combined may be given freely to breeding cows and to your heifers and bulls, with entire safety.—Agr. Paper.

—A Newport girl had a fall last week and injured herself so severely that she was carried home insensible. Upon recovering, her first words, addressed to her sister, were: "Mary, did I have on my striped stockings?"

—"Ladies and gentlemen," said an Irish manager to his audience of three, "as there is nobody here, I'll dismiss you all; the performance of this night will not be performed, but will be repeated to-merrow evening."

—A young man of our acquaintance called on a lady friend Sunday evening, but as he happened to sit down on a chair where the cat was taking a nap, he merely stopped to remark, "Jupiter!" and hurried back home.

LOVING HUSBAND.—A lady who was suffering under a slight indisposition told her husband that it was with the greatest difficulty she could breathe, and the effort distressed her exceedingly. "I wouldn't try, my dear," soothingly responded the husband.

WITHOUT LEAVE.—The father of Dorabella recently found that girl's hands full of blossoms of a beautiful tea-rose on which he had bestowed great care. "My dear," he said, "didn't I tell you not to pick one of those flowers without leave!" "Yes, papa," said she; "but all these had leaves!"

EDITORIAL BAIT.—A paper out West has the following notice: "All notices of marriage when no bride-cake is sent will be set up in small type, and poked in an outlandish corner of the paper. When a handsome piece of cake is sent the notice will be put conspicuously in large letters; when gloves or other bride favors are added, a piece of illustrative poetry will be given in addition. When, however, the editor attends at the ceremony in person, and kisses the bride, it will have special notice—very large type and the most appropriate poetry that can be begged, borrowed, or stolen."

TOO MUCH MARRIED.

DISGRACEFUL SCRAPES OF A CALIFORNIAN IN CANADA.

(From the San Francisco Call.)

The particulars of an affair, in which the principal actor, one Charles W. Love, a recreant San Franciscan, has succeeded in entangling himself in a disgraceful scrape, have been received from Canada. The young man is a possessor of a prepossessing face, and has been wonderfully successful in ensaring susceptible young ladies by profuse blandishment. He resided in this city with his parents until they both died, when he concluded to travel He visited Philadelphia, and formed the acquaintance of the proprietor of a wholesale medical establishment, who was desirous of having his bills posted over the continent. An engagement was entered into, and the young man started on his journey. He varied the monotony of his humdrum business by insinuating himself into the confidence of several young ladies, to each of whom he vowed eternal constancy and undying affection, and two or three of whom he was foolhardy enough to marry under as many aliases. After basking in the smiles of his latest wife for a brief time, he would suddenly desert her and hie to another field and some object of adoration. In June he arrived in the town of Port Hope, Ontario, and, intercepting a young lady on horseback, conceived the idea of adding her to his list of conquests. He learned where she resided, and, visiting the house, desired to be accommodated for a few nights. He represented that he was in possession of about $30,000 in gold, and did not dare to go to an hotel. The gentleman was an agreeable host, and Love, being intelligent and forward, soon ingratiated himself into the affection of the young lady, whose name was Miss Essie J. Brown. The courtship was of short duration, and terminated in a clandestine marriage, to the astonishment of the paternal Brown. He was easily appeased, however, and in a few weeks the newly-married couple started for Toronto on their wedding tour. On the second morning after their arrival in that city the bridegroom was missing and the bride was left husbandless and penniless behind. The scoundrel had stolen her watch, and three rings, and a quarter of a dollar from her, and departed. Some weeks after he was arrested and imprisoned on a charge of neglecting to support his wife. The case came up in the Police Court of Hamilton, Ontario, and was settled, the recreant husband purchasing his liberty for $600 and a return of the stolen property. He left the town with the professed intention of returning to that city. The peace of the Brown family was completely wrecked, and the homestead, which had been in possession of the family for generations, and had been the pride of the village, was advertised for sale on the day of the settlement, the family expressing their intention to leave the scene of their troubles.

—About leaving—the leaves.

—The fruit crop in England is poor this year and large shipments of apples are being made from New York.

—About the time that women learn better than to get off a moving street car in a direction contrary to the motion, the Washington Monument will be finished.

—A facetious person went into a village shop and was observed to be looking about, when the proprietor remarked to him that they didn't keep whiskey. "It would save you a good many steps if you did," was the visitor's reply.

—An Irishman who wanted to purchase a goose, seeing a stuffed owl in a store and taking it for a goose, inquired the price of the bird. "It's an owl," returned the shop-keeper. "I don't care how owld it is, I can ate it," replied the Irishman.

—A man may have an eagle eye, the head of a Lucifer and the majestic port and presence of a Jove; but he will hitch along the street and hunch his shoulder nervously just like any common man the instant that one of the back suspender buttons on his trousers lets go its hold.

—"It may be very well, Mr Henry," said John's wife the other day, "to stay out half the night working for the glorious Republican cause; but if the Republican party left that long yellow hair and that big grease-spot on your new black vest it ain't the kind of a goose-quill I take it for."

—Brooklyn kisses are proverbially the source of untold woe to the parties indulging in them; but excepting Mr. Beecher there is perhaps no man who has paid dearer for his osculatory propensities than has Peter Mallon florist. Some months ago a young lady, fair and beautiful, a scion of the ancestral house of Smith, entered Mallon's store and purchased a boquet. In affixing it to her dress the ardent gaze of the susceptible Mallon was also fixed upon her, and his sense of the unities and the æsthetic in art was offended, as he observed that it was not placed in proper position so as to display its beauties and heighten her charms. With becoming gallantry he called her attention to the fact, and was requested by her to place it where it would do the most good. A barrier stood between them in the shape of a counter, and gay Peter, leaning over it felt his foot slip on something, probably a convenient banana skin, and instinctively threw out his arms to save himself from the disgrace of a fall at such a critical moment. The result was that his hands rested upon her shoulders, and he kissed Miss Smith before he knew it. Peter apologised in the most abject manner, but this did not appease the wrath of the haughty Miss Smith, who at once consulted a lawyer, and brought a suit, laying her damages at $5000. When the case, after many months' weary waiting, came up for trial, twelve good men and true sat upon it, and after hearing the evidence, did what Brooklyn men generally do—failed to agree. The case has been in three different courts, has cost the litigating parties over one thousand dollars each, and it still remains a moot point whether Smith kissed Mallon, or Mallon kissed Smith, or the banana skin caused the kiss.
