The enemy is now patting to Salamanca with great expedition; I lament that I could no longer arreft his progrefs, but, when the enormous fuperiority of the enemy's force is confidered, and that we had no artillery, and that the Puerto de Banos on the Effremadurian fide, is not a pass of fuch firength as on the fide of Castile, especially without guns, I hope that a refiftance for nine hours, which must have cost the enemy a great many men, will not be deemed inadequate to our means.

I have to acknowledge the fervices rendered me on this occasion by Col. Grant, Major Reiman, Don Fermen Marquis, Adjutant-Major of the dragoons of Pavia, Capt. Charles and Mr. Bolman; and to express the greater approbation of two companies of the Merida battalions advanced in front, and of the Commanding Officer and foldiery of the battalions of Seville, and the Pottuguese brigade.—I have already noticed the diffinguished conduct of Don Carlos, and his battalion merits the higheft encomiums.

I have not yet been able to collect the returns of our lofs. From the nature of mountain warfare, many men are nothing who cannot join for a day or two, but I believe the energy will only have to boald that he has achieved his paffage, and his killed and wounded will be a great dimunition of his victory.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Admiralty-Office, September 2. Extract of a Letter from Rear-Admiral Sir RICHARD JOHN STRACHAN, Bart. K. B. to the Hon. W. WELLESLEY POLE, dated on board his Majelly's thip the St. Domingo, off Bathz, 27th August 1809. I have now to acquaint you for their Lordship's information, that the flat boats, of every description of veffels, being attembled, and every neceffary arrangement made, on the part of the navy, for landing the army near Santfleet, on the beach, which had been previoully reconnonced, and not hearing from the Earl of Chatham respecting his intentions, I communicated with his Lordship on the 24th inft. and, on the following day, I found his Lordship had not come to a determination, on account of the increased force of the enemy, and the army getting fickly, and that he had fent for the Generals to confult. 1, therefore, on the morning of the 26th, wrote to his Lordship, and I foon after went on thore to the meeting of the Lieutenant-Generals of the army, taking with me Rear Admiral Sir Richard Keats. I found them decidedly of opinion that no operation could be undertaken against Antwerp, with any prospect of success, at this advanced feafon of the year, and the enemy increafing in fliength, and our own forces diminished by fickness; and that, as the taking of Lillo and Liefkenthoeik would not infure our obtaining the ultimate object of the expedition, without Antwerp being reduced, and the country near these fortrelles being inundated, it was also their decided nine hours gallant contest, he was obliged to retire through the mountains—his corps behaved with great gallantry. When the Pickle left the Tagus, the most active measures were taking to forward supplies to the British army.

Cuefla gave in his refignation on the 12th ult.; a poor atonement for the mifchief he has occasioned, whether proceeding from treachery or obstinacy. He has been fucceeded by a General of the name of Equira.

It is flated in a letter from Cuidad Rodrigo, dated the 31ft of July, that 4000 English had been then for two days at Coria: these, we presume, were the division of Major-General Lightburne. We apprehend that this force will now return to Lisbon.

Downing Street, September 2. A difpatch, of which the following is a copy, was vetterday morning received at the office of Lord Viscount CASTLEREAGH, one of his Majefly's principal Secretaries of State, from Lieutenant-General the Earl of CHATHAM, dated head-quarters, Bath, August 29, 1809.

My LORD, Major Bradford delivered to me your Lordship's dispatch of the 21st inft. fignifying to me his Majosty's commands that I thould convey to Lieut. General Sir Eyre Coote, the General Officers, and other troops employed before Flushing, and particularly to those of the Artillery and Engineer department, his Majefly's moll gracious approbation of their conduct; and which I have obeyed with the molt entire fatisfaction.

I had the honour, in my last difpatch, of acquainting your Lordship with my intention of proceeding to this place, and I should have been most happy to have been enabled to have announced to your Lordship the further progress of this army. Unfortunately, however, it becomes my duty to flate to your Lordship, that from the concurrent testimony from to many quarters, as to leave no doubt of the truth of the information, the enemy appears to have collected fo formidable a force, as to convince me that the period was arrived at which my inflructions would have directed me to withdraw the army under my command, even if engaged in actual operation.

I had certainly early underflood, on my arrival at Walcheren, that the enemy were affembling, in confiderable force, on all points; but I was unwilling to give too much credit to these reports, and I was determined to persevere, until I was satisfied, upon the fulles information, that all further attempts would be unavailable.

From all our intelligence it appears that the force of the enciny in this quarter, distributed between the environs of Bergen-op-Zoom, Breda, Lillo, and Antwerp, and cantoned on the opposite coast, is not less than thirty-five thousand men, and by foms flatements is effimated higher. Though a landing on the continent might, I have no doubt, have been forced, yet as the fiege of Antwerp, the polleffion of which could alone have fecured to us any of the ulterior objects of the expedition. was, by this flate of things. rendered utterly impracticable, fuch a measure, if successful, could have led to no folid advantage; and the retreat of the army, which muft, at an early period, have been inevitable, would have been exposed to much hazard. The utmost force (and that daily decreasing) that I could have brought into the field, after providing for the occupations of Waleheren and South Beveland, would have amounted to about twenty-three thousand infantry and two thouland cavalry. Your Lordihip must at once fee, even if the enemy's force had been lefs numerous than reprefented, after the necellary detachments to obferve the garrifons of Bergen-op-Zoom and Breda, and fecuring our communication, how very inadequate a force mult have remained for operations against Lillo and Liefkenshoeik, and ultimately against Antwerp; which town, fo far from being in the state which had been reported, is, from very correct accounts, represented to be in a very complete flate of defence; and the enemy's thips had been brought up, and placed in fecurity, under the guns of the citadel. Under these circumflances, however mortifying to me to fee the progrefs arrefled of an army from whole good conduct and valour I had every thing to hope, I feel that my duty left me no other course than to close my operations here, and it will always be a satisfaction to me to think, that I have not been induced lightly to commit the fafety of the army confided to me, or the reputation of his Majeffy's arms. It was an additional fatisfaction to me to find that the unanimous opinion of the Lieutenant-Generals of this army, whom I thought it right to confult, more out of refpect to them, than that I thought a doubt could be entertained on the fubject, concurred entirely in the fentiments I have fubmitted to your Lordship, opinion, that the army ought not to make any attempt on them. I had already, in the most unqualified manner, offered every naval ailillance to reduce these fortrelles, and allo in aid of every other operation of the army. Conceiving the fubject of the deliberations of the Generals perfeelly military, I withdrew with Sir Richard Keats. The thips of the enemy, which were above the town of Antwerp about five miles, have come down, and are now extended along the river face of it, except two of the line, lower down, in the reach above Liefkenshoeik; and four frigates went to Lillo. An immense number of small gun-boats are on the boom; behind them a crefcent of fixty gun and mortar brigs. The battery between Lillo and Fredrick Hendrick is finished; it has ten guns. The enemy has been driven from that which he was conflucting on the Doel file, with lofs, by the fire of our bombs and gun-veffels.

EDINBURGH, SEPTEMBER 7. Prepared as the public mind has been, for fome weeks paft, the official notice that all farther operations at the mouth of the Scheidt were abandoned, excited little or no furprife. It will be feen, from Lord Chatham's difpatches in the Gazette, that, after a confultation with the Lieut. Generals of the army, it was unanimoufly decided that, owing to the increased force of the enemy, and the decreased flate of our own, all forther attempts would be unavailable. The causes which led to the fature to this expedition are fufficiently obvious. A feries of unfortunate circumstances have attended it from its commencement. The two principal objects for which the expedition was originally dellined were-a diversion in favor of the Austrians;-and the carrying off or deflruction of the thips at Antwerp. The first of these object was afforedly the primary one; but, before the expedition failed, it was rendered nugatory by the armillice. As every thing was in readinels, and the public expectation ran high, the expedition was difpatched on the fecondary object, though it certainly never would have been fet on foot loiely for fuch a purpole. The unexpected holding out of Flußbing (which it was judged necessary to fecure first) completely rendered all attempt on Lillo and Antwerp delperate and unavailing; for the length of time enabled the enemy to collect an immense force, to flrengthen their fortifications and partially to inundate the country .---The rapidity with which a defensive force would be collected, on fuch an occasion, may be judged of by what might pollibly occur to ourfelves. Should a French armament, eluding the watchfulnels of our fquadrons, appear at the mouth of the Firth or Forth, and its further progress were fuspended, for a short period, by constary winds, we will venture to fay, that fuch a force would be collected, in as many hours as the enemy at Antwerp have had days, as would render every attempt at landing impracticable. It is for far confolatory, that the lofs of lives on this occafion has been comparatively fmall; and that the good fenfe of our commanders has proved superior to that false pride, or miltaken point of honor, which might have induced them to facrifice the lives of our brave troops in desperate and fruitles attempts. It is not clearly afcertained whether the poffession of the Island of Walcheren is to be temporary or permanent. The mouth of the Scheldt can only be closed by a naval force.

SEPTEMBER 11.

Government have received dispatches from Lord Wellington, dated Truxillo, August 21, brought by Captain Stewart of the Royals, Aid-de-Camp to Major-General Mackenzie, who came home in the Pickle schooner, from Lifbon, in eleven days. By these it appears, that his Lordthip had been under the necessity of falling back towards Elvas, in confequence of his army being fhort of provisions. The dispatches describe the fufferings and privations of our gallant troops to have been of the most afflicting kind, Not a pound of meat was to be obtained, and the most common articles of subfillence were procured with the greatest difficulty, and even then in very infufficient quantities. They had been exposed to the most trying diffress, the forage having completely failed, without the probability of a fupply. Lord Wellington had, notwithstanding, maintained his fituation to the very laft poffible moment, under the hope of supplies, in which finding himself disappointed, he had been obliged to retreat. There had, however, been no appearance of the enemy, who, it feems, had not paffed the Tagus, except with a body of cavalry near Arzobispo, which took the cannon of Cuefta's rear guard. The enemy's army had seperated. Soult's was at Placentia; Ney was gone back to Salamanca; Mortier, Victor, and Sebaftiani in Efframadura and La Mancha. Sir R. Willon had engaged, with his funall corps, Ney's army, on its return from Salamanca, near Banos, After
