LONDON, OCTOBER 14.

NAVAL INTELLIGENCE.

The following information has been received from an officer off the Texel, dated the 28th ult.:

"The Constitution American frigate, having on board 250,000 dollars, is gone into the Texel; she previously spoke the Aboukir, and obtained Capt. Parker's permission. The enemy's ships here consist of six sail of the line; five only of them are ready for sea; and the other is hoisting in her lower deck guns; one frigate, and three brigs. They get under weigh occasionally, and manœuvre, but in a most lubberly manner. They now appear to be gone to their winter quarters; and we have no expectation they will approach the Heider again this winter."

The fir-frigates and brigs, which several years ago were built by order of Government, have more than answered the expectations which were then entertained of them. The Sea gull, a fine brig of war, ran 14 years; but fatally kept the sea too long. She was lost in the Channel, in a gale of wind, and had put to sea in an indifferent state. The only account ever heard of the Sea gull was brought to Plymouth by a merchant vessel, which passed close to her in great distress, but could not assist her; her masts were gone, her pumps going, and her planks fearfully gaping, as the merchant-man passed her. In this awful moment, a voice from the former cried out—"If you reach Plymouth, tell the lads you have seen the last of the poor Sea gull."

Our squadron off Basque roads, and our cruizers all along the French coast, have been latterly most eminently successful in the capture and destruction of the enemy's chasse-marees and coasting vessels; twenty-eight of which, of different descriptions, have within the last fortnight been brought into Plymouth.

The Fox frigate, of 32 guns, lately arrived from the East-Indies, left England in the year 1795. She has not brought home six persons of her original crew; many of them having been promoted, and others invalidated home, from ill health.

A letter from Deal states, that by the sudden shifting of the sand, a bar has risen at the entrance of the Texel, which renders it impossible for the squadron in that harbor to come out. The following is an extract from it:—

DEAL, OCTOBER 6.—Probably you may have heard the following, which came by the Dover pilot, which is returned into the Downs with the Constitution American frigate, with which he has been to Holland: On their arrival off the Texel they made a signal for a pilot to take them in, and on inquiring what water they drew, was told 19 feet, on which the pilot told them there was not sufficient water for them; and on being asked what they meant to do with the six men of war and a frigate which they had in there, on board of one of which was an Admiral's flag flying? was told that at present it was impossible for them to get out, as the bar had lately grown up three feet: after they had informed the pilot of their errand, which was to bring them a large sum of money, requesting him to get information for them how to act; a boat was sent to say they must wait, which seemed to arise from some difference of opinion between the French and Dutch Officers, a circumstance which so often happens as to retard the whole of their proceedings. However, on the American Capt. sending word he should only wait a certain number of hours, they thought fit to send out boats to fetch the money on shore. One of our cruizers carried the compliments from the Commander stationed off there to the American Captain, requesting he would wait on him, which the other immediately complied with, when every attention was paid him on the occasion."

The following letter contains some particulars of the gallant action between the Fly, and a cloud of Danish gun-boats:—

WINGO, SEPTEMBER 9.—His Majesty's brig Fly has arrived at Wingo, near Gottenburgh, after an action of two hours with the enemy's gun-boats, off Langeland, on the 30th Aug. consisting of 17 gun-boats, each carrying one long 36-pounder, and two small guns, and 70 men, together with 22 small boats, making in all 39, which were supported with field pieces, and a battery on shore, within musket shot. The enemy sustained great loss; the Fly lost her upper masts, &c. and had one man killed."

A letter from Plymouth, dated October the 5th, contains the following information:—"The dock-yard at this port was never so well supplied with ship timber and naval stores of every description as at present; and in addition to the numerous vessels that have lately arrived with timber from Quebec, and other parts of British America, another large fleet (the last for the season) is daily expected from the same quarter. Dantzic oak, and Riga black, are the only articles of which there is a deficiency, and for these we have very good substitutes.

In bestowing the command of the Dutch Navy on Admiral De Winter, Bonaparte has shown that he can distinguish an illustrious and a gallant man, though much of his original splendour has been diminished through the mists of adversity.

De Winter was the Admiral opposed to Lord Duncan in the battle of Camperdown, and may be pronounced, with truth, the very best Naval Officer whom Napoleon has under his controul.

OCTOBER 21.

Military Honor.—At the expedition to Walcheren, some of the French cannon were found spiked in Fort De Batz; when John Skinner, a Grenadier belonging to the First Regiment of Foot Guards, applied to his commanding officer, Colonel Rainsford, to allow him permission to make an attempt in working the spikes out; and having made himself a tool, with the assistance of some sand, he completely accomplished his object of unspiking them. This was considered such a meritorious act, that it was represented to the Duke of York.
