TO ELIZA—with a Rose.

GO, lovely Rose, but not to die, Full many seasons yet to come:
Beneath Eliza's gentle eye, Upon her bosom thou may'st bloom.
Besew'd by all her balmy sighs, Faun'd by the zephyrs of her breath, Thou shalt be nurtur'd for the skies, If envy do not prove thy death.
But ah, I fear, when all the boast Of charms and fragrance thou canst shed, In her superior charms are lost, Thou wilt, with envy droop thy head.
Nay, more to equal her will die;
But vain the strife—thy fragrant breath A fragrance then, cannot supply So sweet as virtue breathes in death.

DISTRESS AND JOY.

TOM True-love braving rocks and storms And horror in her direst forms, Plough'd with his ship East Indies' main.
Solac'd by Hope to land once more Upon Columbia's much lov'd shore, To cheer his Anna with his hard-earn'd gain.

Behold desponding Anna pray, Long past the long-expected day,
Her mind distracted by a thousand fears, Her aged father's sick in bed,
Her shivering children cry for bread, Sorrows and care conflicting claim her tears.

To a small box which close contains Some cherish'd precious few remains, See her with silent fault'ring steps repair, Her mother's bracelets left by will,
Her mother's picture dearer still—An' Tom's first gift she seizes with despair.

To hesitate would be to sink, She rushes forth afraid to think,
And sighing takes what usury supplies;
Now to the Doctor she repairs, Now for her darlings food prepares, Now joy'd to comfort all, she homeward flies.

Medicines her father's pains beguile, Her cherub infants eat and smile, But yet her tender bosom beats alarms.
She thinks,—how short this dear relief, She starts—what noise disturbs her grief?
Her Tom next moment clasps her in his arms!

BEAUTIFUL MORCEAU.

IN a far distant clime I have left a sweet rose, A blossom unfolding its exquisite ray;
More lovely than morning it timidly glows, And fairer its blush than the rich bloom of May.
I fear that another, enamour'd, may view it, May steal it away from its parent stem, That in absence, some fortunate lover may view it,
And I sigh when I think on the beautiful gem.
To the shade where the flow'ret is destin'd to flourish,

On the wing of affection I hastily fly, For what is there sweeter than fondly to nourish What is dear to the heart, what is fair to the eye?
O leave not the bow'r, sweet rose, till I come, Hope whispers thy bloom I again shall survey; My bosom, believe me, was form'd for thy home, O leave not the bow'r till it bears thee away!

LORD COCHRANE.

The apprehension of Lord COCHRANE took place yesterday, in the House of Commons, under circumstances which render it as remarkable as his mysterious escape from the King's Bench Prison.

About half-past one o'clock his Lordship was seen passing hastily through the avenues of the House to the lobby, across which he went with great precipitation into the body of the House. After remaining there a short time, he came out again and went to the office of Mr. Dorrington, to take the preliminary steps necessary to his taking his seat in the House, and a messenger, at his request, was despatched to the Crown Office, in Chancery-lane, for the Writ of his Return as the Representative of the City of Westminster. His Lordship then returned to the House, and, taking his seat on the Treasury Bench, took from his pocket a pamphlet, and some manuscripts, which he began to read in a loud tone. Information of his Lordship's appearance in the House of Commons having been sent to the King's Bench, the principal officers entrusted with the care of this prison, accompanied by William Jones, Esq. the Marshal, and Mr.
Brooshooff, the Deputy, set off in search of him.—Mr. Jones entered the House of Commons, accompanied by Mr. Lavender, the officer of Queen's-square, Mr. Pace and Mr.

Gibbon, his own tip-staff. Lavender and Pace advanced respectfully towards his Lordship, and the former said, "My Lord, you are my prisoner." Lord Cochrane immediately demanded his authority: upon which Lavender replied, "My Lord, my authority is the public proclamation of the Marshal of the King's Bench Prison, offering a reward for your apprehension." Lord Cochrane then said he was there in attendance to resume his seat as one of the Representatives of the city of Westminster, and that he would obey no such authority. The officers then took his Lordship by the arms, and requested him to accompany them. He refused, however, and resisted their efforts to remove him, struggling and kicking with some violence. He was at length however overpowered, and Lavender perceiving him put his hand towards his pocket, he was led to believe he was not without fire-arms.
This idea induced him, as a measure of precaution, to search his Lordship's pockets, but he found nothing, save a few loose papers, some snuff, a bottle containing some chemical acid, and three or four pistol bullets. On the snuff being pulled out, his Lordship said—"That is snuff. I candidly own to you, that I intend to throw it into the eyes of any one that should attempt to interrupt me." His Lordship was finally conveyed out of the House, and on reaching the lobby he proceeded quietly, but evidently labouring under considerable agitation, escorted by the officers into Palace-yard, where a coach was called, and his Lordship was reconducted to the King's Bench prison, and once more safely lodged within its walls. He was placed in a strong room, without fire, and whilst there, was visited by Mr. Bennett and Mr. B. Wilbra-ham, who, with others of a Committee appointed to inquire into the state of the prison, happened to be on the spot.

A variety of reports are in circulation, but we are assured that his Lordship, up at a late hour last night, had not communicated to those about him further than as follows:

He considered himself as an ill-used man; that he ought not to have been sent to prison; Cochrane Johnstone had robbed him of £400: that he went to the House of Commons to have the question again agitated; never had a thought of leaving England; had been all the while in London.

The above statements of his Lordship were answers to questions put to him: but he declined, we understand, to enter into any narrative of the motives of his late conduct. It is strongly suspected his Lordship's mind has been affect'd by the late proceedings, and that all his conduct of late has been the result of insanity. He is at present confined in the strong room, in the King's Bench prison.

For some days past the Marshal of the Bench had, as we are inform'd, strong reason to believe that his Lordship intended to re-enter the prison as secretly as he broke out of it. Precautions, however, were taken to frustrate this intention. It is further said, that the Police-officers were aware that his Lordship was in London, and had frequently been able to trace him even within a few yards of the place where he was supposed at the time to be. It is reported that he had written a letter to the Speaker, announcing that he would take his seat yesterday, for the purpose of moving an impeachment.

Some conversation took place in the House of Commons on this extraordinary occurrence above detailed, which our readers will find in our report of the Parliamentary proceedings. The business, as far as relates to the privileges of Parliament, is referred to the Committee of Privileges.

"Murder most Foul."

Extract of a letter from Bucktown, (Mc.) May 15.

One of the most melancholy events that ever this country witnessed, took place at Ellsworth on the 12th inst. On the 13th, I passed through Ellsworth on my way to Bucktown. While there, I learnt that Sheriff ADAM's wife had the preceding day been found dead in her own house, most horribly mangled. The circumstances, as I understood them from a collection of women at Mrs. Langdon's, were these:—The murder was supposed to have been committed about 2 o'clock on the 12th inst. and was discovered by one of the children returning from school between 3 and 4 o'clock. The Sheriff about that time was seen coming from his house. He went down to the bridge, and then returned to Langdon's, where the mail was then opening, and where there was a considerable collection of people. The Sheriff requested them to go with him, which they did, and found the body lying on the floor, the skull fractured, and the head a most severed from the body. There were also a number of cuts and contusions. The weapons with which the dreadful deed was perpetrated, (an axe and boot-jack, the latter considerably splintered) lay beside the body. [We hear that Mr. Adams has been arrested on suspicion of being the murderer.]

ST. LOUIS, APRIL 3.

Awful Massacre.—The village of Cote Sans Dessein (on the Missouri) burnt, and its inhabitants massacred!!!

Three men arrived here last night from the above mentioned place, and state, that for some time they were apprehensive of a visit from the Indians, that they built two block houses as a place of safety for the women and children, in case of attack; that on the 3d instant, they had sent out 13 men as spies, a few miles from the village, where they observed Indian signs, they had proceeded on their search the next day, when they heard a heavy firing at the village and a thick smoke in that direction, anxious for the safety of their families, they immediately returned, and found near the first house, the bodies of old Lacroix and his son, their heads nearly cut off. All the houses were in flames, the place full of Indians, butchering all the inhabitants, whose shrieks could be distinctly heard amidst the horrid yells of the savages. The village of Cote sans Dessein contained about 200 souls.— We have had boats, men, and officers to station at proper positions on the Missouri and Mississippi, but nothing has yet been done. All is indecision in this quarter!

At the breaking up of the ice the sending up the armed boats, were strenuously urged, but alas! imbecility frustrated every prudent measure.
