

LORD BYRON.

From the hands of an attentive correspondent in London, we have received a small pamphlet, entitled, "Lord Byron's Seven New Poems." We do not know that we have yet informed our readers, what has found its way into most of our Newspapers that the separation of the poet BYRON from his wife, had, for some weeks divided the public attention in England with the marriage of their Princess Royal. The London papers are filled with facts, conjectures, poetry and nonsense on the subject. "One would think," says our friend on the other side of the water, "there was a dearth of original matter here, to judge from the conversation on this merely family affair. I saw yesterday, in a shop window, a ninth edition from another edition of the same poems, of which, however, I think the enclosed has the advantage. The nine days' wonders of London, are a subject of curious speculation. The dirge of the committee of manufactures, more doleful to the interests of this country, than the defeats at Platsburg and New-Orleans to its military character, has been printed indeed, and with invidious remarks, in the Times newspaper; but it receives not half so much attention as the report of a coroner, or the result of a criminal's examination at Bow-street." It is not our intention to trouble our readers to read Ld. Byron's dolorous epistle to an injured wife, nor yet his poetical anathema, against a mischievous go-between, but we select from this poetic collection a production of a very different character. Without regard to the correctness of the sentiments, it must be admitted that a lofty independence and manly energy runs through the whole Poem, which does credit to its author's pen.

OH shame to thee, Land of the Gaul!
Oh shame to thy children and thee!
Unwise in thy glory, and base in thy fall,
How wretched thy portion shall be!
Derision shall strike thee forlorn,
A mockery that never shall die;
The curses of Hate, and the hisses of Scorn
Shall burthen the winds of thy sky;
And, proud o'er thy ruin, forever be hurl'd
The laughter of Triumph, the jeers of the World!

Oh where is thy spirit of yore,
The spirit that breaths in thy dead,
When gallantry's star, was the beacon before,
And honor the passion that led?
Thy storms have awaken'd their sleep,
They groan from the place of their rest,
And wrathfully murmur, and suddenly weep,
To see the foul stain on thy breast;
For where is the glory they left thee in trust?
'Tis scattered in darkness, 'tis trampled in dust!

Go, look through the kingdoms of earth,
From Indus all round to the Pole,
And something of goodness, of honor, and worth,
Shall brighten the sins of the soul:
But thou art alone in thy shame,
The world cannot liken thee there:
Abhorrence and vice have disfigur'd thy name
Beyond the low reach of compare;
Stupendous in guilt, thou shalt lend us thro' time
A proverb, a bye-word, for 'treach'ry and crime!

While conquest illumin'd his sword,
While yet in his prowess he stood,
Thy praises still followed the steps of thy Lord,
And welcom'd the torrent of blood;
Though tyranny sat on his crown,
And withered the nations afar,
Yet bright in thy view was that Despot's renown,
Till fortune deserted his ear;
Then, back from the chieftain thou slunkest away—
The foremost to insult, the first to betray!

Forgot were the feats he had done,
The toils he had borne in thy cause;
Thou turn'd'st to worship a new rising sun,
And waft other songs of applause;
But the storm was beginning to lour,
Adversity clouded his beam:
And honor and faith were the brag of an hour,
And loyalty's self but a dream:
To him thou hadst banish'd thy vows were restor'd;
And the first that had scoff'd, were the first that ador'd!

What tumult thus burthens the air,
What throng thus encircles his throne?
'Tis the shout of delight, 'tis the millions that swear
His sceptre shall rule them alone.
Reverses shall brighten their zeal,
Misfortune shall hallow his name,
And the world that pursues him shall mournfully feel
How quenchless the spirit and flame
That Frenchmen will breathe, when their hearts are on fire,
For the Hero they love, and the Chief they admire!

Their hero has rushed to the field;
His laurels are cover'd with shade—
But where is the spirit that never should yield,
The loyalty never to fade?
In a moment desertion and guile
Abandon'd him up to the foe;

The dastards that flourish'd and grew by his smiles,
Forsook and renounced him in woe;
And the millions that swore they would perish to save
Beheld him a fugitive, captive, and slave!

The Savage all wild in his glen
Is nobler and better than thou;
Thou standest a wonder, a marvel to men,
Such perfidy blackens thy brow!
If thou wert the place of my birth,
At once from thy arms would I sever;
I'd fly to the uttermost ends of the earth,
And quit thee for ever and ever;
And thinking of thee in my long after-years,
Should but kindle my blushes and waken my tears.

Oh, shame to thee, land of the Gaul!
Oh, shame to thy children and thee!
Unwise in thy glory and base in thy fall,
How wretched thy portion shall be!
Derision shall strike thee forlorn,
A mockery that never shall die;
The curses of Hate and the hisses of Scorn
Shall burthen the winds of thy sky;
And proud o'er thy ruin for ever be hurl'd
The laughter of Triumph, the jeers of the World!
