Legislature of New-Brunswick.

Extracts from the Journals of the House of Assembly. 19th FEBRUARY, 1816.

The House in Committee, Mr. Campbell in the Chair, went into further consideration of the great Road Bill.

MESSAGE from the COUNCIL.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Justice Chipman is appointed a Committee, to confer with the Committee of the Assembly on the subject of the last conference on the amendments to the Bill to ascertain Ratable Estates, and that he notify his appointment to the House.

Mr. R. Pagan from the Committee of conference, appointed to meet a Committee of the Council on the subject of the amendments proposed by the Council to the Bill to ascertain Ratable Estates; reports that they have had a conference this day with the Committee of the Council, and received from them in writing, reasons in support of their amendments, which are as follows, viz.

The Council instruct the Committee appointed to manage the conference upon such of the amendments made to the Bill "to ascertain Ratable Estates in this Province, and for other purposes therein mentioned," as are objected to by the Assembly, to state to the managers on the part of the House, in answer to their communication upon the subject, that the Council are fully aware of the importance, if not necessary, of making a Law for the purposes contemplated in the present Bill, and that after so much pains taken in its formation, and its obviating in so great a degree the difficulties and inconveniences that have been hitherto experienced; it was with extreme reluctance that the Council felt themselves constrained to make any amendments that could in any degree hazard its being passed; more especially as it is so limited in its duration, and although some of its provisions might be considered as inadequate for the purposes intended by them, and others objectionable, yet the experience to be had from its operation, it might be hoped, would lead ultimately to the formation of such a Law as would comport with the views and wishes of all parties. The Council deprecate the idea of calling in question or infringing, at any time, any of the constitutional privileges of the House, and are therefore willing, in this instance, without further discussion, to take it for granted that the present may be a Bill of the description contended for on the part of the House; but even under this view of the subject, the adoption of the amendments objected to by the House, appeared to the Council essential and indispensable to prevent the rejection of the bill. The amendments to be proposed to the first and second sections of the Bill, which are objected to by the House, are founded upon different, though, as the Council conceive, fundamental principles, which ought not to be departed from; the amendment to the former is indeed of such a nature that the Council cannot wave it—if therefore the House should continue to be of opinion that any Bill for the purpose contemplated in the present, must contain a clause similar to that now under consideration, unqualified with the proposed amendment, the Council fear that all efforts to relieve the Province from the difficulties experienced under the existing Law, will prove unavailing and fruitless, a result which the Council would most deeply lament. The amendments to the second, and consequently to the eleventh section of the Bill, are founded upon a different principle, namely, that property, while it remains altogether unimproved and unproductive, is not in any just or equitable view of the subject, a proper object of taxation. The Council, however, most sincerely desirous that the Bill should not be lost, are willing to submit to its operation in this regard, during the short period for which it is passed, being persuaded that upon a more deliberate view of the subject, and the Lessons that will be in the mean time suggested by experience, a similar provision will not on any future occasion be contended for—the Council therefore consent to withdraw

Council to the Committee of this House on the proposed amendments to the Bill for ascertaining Ratable Estates; and resolvved, that the House cannot agree to the amendment adhered to by the Council, to the Bill to ascertain Ratable Estates in this Province, and for other purposes therein mentioned, which are now adhered to by the Council—Resolved further, that the further consideration of this amendment be postponed for three months.

LONDON, JAN. 16.

We received this morning some German Papers, and though what we are about to say may come rather unexpectedly upon our readers, we suspect that the German will very soon become of more importance and interest than the French Papers—and we do thus early announce, that there is on the part of some of these Journalists, by whom employed we shall not yet enquire, a project to weaken the popularity and the character which this country has so deservedly acquired, and to render the internal situation of Prussia embarrassing and insecure.

Prussia is the great bulwark of the Continent, the bulwark upon which the balance mainly depends. It is of the greatest importance that she should be rendered formidable in point of power, and there is no accession of strength which she can receive, that we would not view with the highest approbation. But efforts are making to render her the scene, and possibly the victim of contending parties. The King by his ordonnance of the 22d of May, had promised to establish a representative constitution, and efforts have been made to disturb the public mind and pave the way for political storms, during this passage from one constitution to another.

The effort of some of these German Papers is, to render the intention of Great-Britain suspected, and to make us objects of jealousy to Austria, Turkey, and to Russia. It is hinted, that our possessions of the Ionian Islands will annihilate all the consideration which the possession of Venice might give to Austria; that we are so near Turkey as to be able to send an army at a very short notice into the Dardanelles; that we have in view the seizing of Greece, &c.—The following observations upon this subject are extracted from another of the German Papers that arrived this morning—

"The century which saw Venice, Genoa, Ragusa, and Polizza, cease to be independent States, has presented us for the second time with a Republic of the Ionian Islands! This time, as the first, Russia comes forward as the father of the child; but now England takes upon herself the guardianship, and it will hardly slip out of her hands. Corfu is indeed a sterile rock, but in strength it hardly yields to the impregnable Malta; and Cefalona and Zante yield in abundance the finest fruit of the South.

"Besides this, the opposite coast, the native country of Pyrrhus and Castriot, is inhabited by the boldest and most warlike people of the East of Europe. There England will recruit her armies, if the market in Germany shall become too limited. From this point she can act with energy, if at some future period a neighbour should have a mind to transplant into Greece the benefits of our civilization, our financial systems, and our conscriptions.

"In a few days sail from Corfu, an English fleet may be before the Dardanelles, and a co-operating army requires at most 14 days to cross Mount Hæmus, considerations of this kind have probably induced Austria to recognize the new Republic. For it certainly has not escaped her Counsellors that the sovereignty of the Adriatic is transferred from Venice to Corfu, and that a few armed boats suffice to ruin the whole trade of the Littoral. These several Islands on the coast of Albania, Livadia, and the Morea, about 45 (German) square miles, and 200,000 inhabitants. They are—
