

FROM THE CENTINEL.

"O GIVE ME MY COTTAGE."

O GIVE me my Cottage, beside the pure stream,
Enclos'd in some woodland retreat;
Far, far, from the bustle of life's busy dream,
Where solitude chooses her seat.

Where the green waving willow droops mournfully
o'er,
And darkens the shade of the wave;

Where the sweet balmy woodbines entwine round my door,
And the breeze lowly sighs thro' the cave.

Where thro' the dark foliage, I sometimes can trace,
A glimpse of the Sun's golden ray;
Till the swift passing Zephyrs the branches replace,
And darken the splendor of day.

'Tis there unrestrained, I can pour out my soul,
And vent the fond thoughts of my heart:
There NATURE will kindly my sorrows console,
And gentler emotions impart.

The Zephyrs will sweetly respond to my sigh,
The waves softly murmur my grief;
And as the mild zephyr gently flows from my eye,
'Twill give to my bosom relief.

And when through the dark waving foliage I trace,
A gleam of the Sun's golden ray:
'Twill shed on my bosom the glow of sweet peace,
And chase ev'ry sorrow away. MORA.

New-York, August 14.

Mournful Catastrophe.—We learn from unquestionable authority, that a young woman of good character made away with herself on Thursday last, about a mile from Hoboken ferry, where her body was found and brought to this city and interred on Friday, agreeably to the request in the following Memorandum, which was found in her bosom.

"That whoever finds my body may have some means of discovering who I am, I will give you the following particulars,

"I was born in the town of Rye, state of N. York; in my early life I lived with an aunt in that place. For these three years past I have resided in the city of N. York, and have committed many errors, but no heinous crimes. My parents are now living in New-York. Enemies have persuaded my mother against me; she has treated me with the greatest coolness ever since I lived with her. It is this that has driven me to this horrid act. Why should I wish to live?—I have no friends; no well wishers; my parents despise me. Who should I look to for comfort?—I am determined to die!

"How shall I meet an avenging and justly offended God! How shall I appear at his bar, to answer for this last offence!—I hope you will have the goodness to inform my parents where I am. My parents live at 115, Lombardy-street, New-York. My name is P.—M.—I have not completed my 18th year, but misfortunes have brought me to an untimely death! I came here that I might effect my purpose unobserved—I bid my dear sisters farewell! May Heaven bless you, and your mother be kinder to you, and love you better than she did me. I beg that my remains may be carried to New-York.—I now take my leave of this world, to make atonement for my sins in the next. "Farewell! Father, Mother, and dear Sisters! and my dearest of Aunts."

From the Western Federalist, Feb. 28

Born in the town of Manlius, on Sunday last, a child with three heads, five legs, and four arms. The child was still born, and the mother's life is despaired of. A physician has offered 400 dollars for the child.

Some time since a member of Congress who was not content with the usual drink allowed by the house, (mollasses and water) begged for a little spirited mixture. The door keeper remonstrated against this innovation, on the ground of not knowing to what account he should charge the expenditure: "to which account do you charge the customary drink?" said the honorable member. "To that of stationary," replied the door keeper; then charge the brandy, rejoined the member, "to that of fuel."

ARRIVAL OF BONAPARTE IN LONDON!!!

—On Wednesday this great character was landed at the Tower. He came from the Thuilleries at Paris, where he had been roughly handled by the Allies. The reports of his enormous size are correct; he measures thirteen feet in height, and weighs seven tons. His countenance is smooth, and though it has generally been supposed that he was only stony-hearted, yet it appears that he is throughout as hard as marble. He re-embarked soon after he arrived, on a visit to Carlton-house, where he will only remain for a few days, and then take up his abode at the British Museum, as one of its chief curiosities. The concourse of people who attended at the Tower, in order to witness his landing, though they were not permitted to see his person was so great, that it was with some difficulty that the military could preserve good order.
