BOSTON, JANUARY 6.

PARTICULARS OF THE DEATH OF THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF WALES.

News has been received from England by the way of Newport, of the death of the Princess Charlotte and her Infant. We have been favored by our obliging correspondent at Newport with a printed hand-bill, and with the London Times of the 7th November. The hand-bill is as follows:

Office of the Newport Mercury,
Monday, Dec. 29, 1817.

Arrived this day, ship Amazon, Davens, of this port, 40 days from the Downs. By this arrival, we have been favored by Capt. D. with the London Courier of the 6th and 7th of November.—They are entirely occupied with accounts of the illness and death of the Princess Charlotte, daughter of the Prince Regent, and of the preparations for her funeral. Capt. D. obtained at Deal a London paper of November 11th, but has mislaid it. The following official notices of the illness and death of the Princess Charlotte are the only articles which are interesting in the papers.

LONDON, November 6.

Death of the Princess Charlotte of Wales, after the Birth of a Son, still born.

The hopes of the country are dashed to the earth. Instead of tidings of great joy, instead of proclaiming the birth of a future Sovereign of these Realms, "of England's future hope and glory," we have to perform the painful task of announcing, that her Royal Highness, after having been delivered of a still-born male child, expired in a few hours afterwards!—As soon as this fatal event had been conveyed to His Majesty's Ministers, Lord Sidmouth dispatched a letter to the Lord Mayor, informing him of this afflicting news. Lord Sidmouth sent also to the different Theatres, commanding them to be shut; and the following Extraordinary Gazette was published.

LONDON GAZETTE EXTRA,

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6.

WHITEHALL, November 6.

Her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, daughter of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and consort of His Serene Highness the Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, was delivered of a still-born male child, at nine o'clock last night; about half-past twelve her Royal Highness was seized with great difficulty of breathing and exhaustion, which alarming symptoms increased till half-past two o'clock this morning, when Her Royal Highness expired, to the inexpressible grief of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, of her illustrious consort, the Prince Leopold, and of all the Royal Family."

Dispatches were immediately sent off to the Queen and Princesses at Bath, who will probably return forthwith to town, and to every other Member of the Royal Family. The Duke of York, and, we believe, Earl Bathurst, are gone to Claremont, to Prince Leopold; and a Council, we hear, will be held in the course of the day, to give the necessary orders for the Funeral of the lamented Princess, and for a general Mourning. It will, we have no doubt, be as general a one, as ever took place in this country.

The melancholy event produced a depression in the Funds, which was further aggravated by a report in the City, of the Prince Regent having been taken dangerously ill in the country. This last report, we can positively contradict.

From the London Times of Nov. 7, received at the Office of the Boston Patriot.

LONDON, Nov. 7.

It is our painful and unexpected duty this day to give an account of as melancholy an event as occurs in the annals of hereditary monarchies; the death of the only two presumptive heirs to the Crown in direct succession, the mother and her child. The circumstances of their dissolution are as affecting to private feelings as the event itself may be esteemed publicly calamitous; for if there is an occasion on which the infliction of the universal doom excites peculiar sorrow, it is that wherein the more tender sex is alone exposed to pain and hazard; and if there is a station to which man might wish to be born, for this purpose of promoting the happiness of his fellow creatures, it is that of the constitutional Sovereign of the British Empire. Under these circumstances, we have lost a Prince, just before he saw the light, and a Princess in the prime of youth. The regret of the public throughout the metropolis was proportionate to the magnitude of this double disaster. It is but little to say, that we never recollect so strong and general an expression and indication of sorrow. We can hardly even fix our historic recollections upon any antecedent period, wherein the nation would seem at the time to have greater cause to grieve. It certainly does not belong to us to repine at the visitations of Providence, in whose power it is to draw good out of evil; but as the Almighty sometimes, for the most benevolent purposes, deals severe chastisement on mankind, there is nothing unpoetic in grieving for that as a calamity, which appears and is felt to be such, according to the best reason which we can apply to the consideration of it. May we so conduct ourselves as to ward off all the ill effects that might hereafter follow!

The most early stages of the Princess Charlotte's labor, were related in our paper yesterday, up to the moment when the bulletin announced that the child was still-born, and the mother "doing extremely well." The date of that official paper was 10 o'clock, on Wednesday night, the Princess having then been delivered about an hour. At six, the throes of child-birth had become more decisive; and the child was then, and, it is said, even up to a few minutes before its birth, ascertained to be living.—At its birth it was found a perfect fine-formed male infant. There is something extremely affecting in the consideration, that the mother should out-live her offspring but little longer than to receive the painful tidings of its death; and it may be difficult to ascertain, whether a parent's emotions would be more acute (where the aware of her coming fate) on embracing a living infant which she must soon leave, or viewing a breathless one as the only reward of her pains; but during this trying scene, and throughout the whole of her tedious labor, the Princess maintained the utmost firmness and resignation. After the birth, her Royal Highness appeared so tranquil and composed, that between 12 and 1; the medical gentlemen retired to rest. The Cabinet Ministers, also, having full reason to believe that all danger was over, had left Claremont soon after 11 o'clock, but were afterwards recalled. The first symptom of approaching danger is said to have been on some gruel being presented her, which she found a difficulty in swallowing—cold and spasms succeeded. The Physicians were called up, but their aid was vain.—For the last half hour, her spasms are said to have subsided; she sunk into a calm composure, speechless, but apparently not insensible; and at half-past 2 o'clock, she was no more.

The London Times of the 7th November remarks, that on the death of the Princess Charlotte, the indications of grief were universal throughout the City; and measures were instantly adopted for giving public and official solemnity to the internal feelings. The Lord Mayor summoned an especial Court of Aldermen, which took place at Guildhall. When it was unanimously agreed, that the fitting up of the Guildhall for Lord Mayor's day next, should be immediately discontinued, and the preparations already made for the purpose removed. Public notice was also directed to be given for abolishing all show and rejoicings on that day.

In the more immediate vicinity of Claremont the symptoms were still more strongly marked. The houses of Esler and Kingston, where preparations had been made for bonfires, on the safe delivery of the Princess, were actually shut up, as if a death had happened in almost every family there.

His Majesty's Ministers arrived in London about 5 o'clock in the morning; after which a note was sent by Lord Sidmouth to the Lord Mayor. The Lord Mayor in consequence, ordered the great bell of St. Paul's to toll, as is customary when any of the Royal Family die. The trades-people of the Royal Family we observed, by a spontaneous movement, shut up the windows of their shops. Lord Sidmouth also sent to suspend performances at the different Theatres. Orders for a general mourning will be given; and even without orders, the people would of themselves, we are convinced, shew every external mark of homage and respect to the memory of their lamented Princess.

It is said the Princess Charlotte received the intelligence of her child being dead with the greatest firmness, observing, with pious resignation, "It is the will of God." Prince Leopold was present at the moment of her own dissolution, and is stated to have been inconsolable.
