

the support of the foreign troops, that kingdom will, nevertheless, be closely watched and observed. Russia and England especially insisted on the departure of the Army of Occupation.

"To the general satisfaction of all the inhabitants of this city, his Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, has entirely recovered from his indisposition, and has resumed his usual promenades. When the Deputies of the city lately waited upon him, to request his Majesty to honour with his presence, the Ball given by the city on his feet, he condescended to enquire into the state of the Manufactures. The Deputies replied, that they had much declined since France and Italy were shut against them.—As for Italy," replied the Emperor, "I did it, but then it is my duty to take care of the interest of my people. It were to be wished that there were Treaties of Commerce between all Nations, and I am well inclined to conclude such."

"The cloud, which, intercepting the clear light,
Hears o'er thy eyes, and blunts thy mortal sight,
I will remove."

Mr. LUGRIN.

A Correspondent in criticising the Almanack for the year ensuing, published by Copernicus, finds much fault with his arrangement of some articles, and even animadverts on what you Sons of the Type modestly term typographical errors—defects which ought never to be laid at an author's door. I could easily forgive S's remarks on my friend's small publication, had he stated things correctly, but he says Copernicus has given a bad sample of orthography in spelling the name of His Majesty's Representative: this observation is too trivial to notice. In the list of Officers of the Province, His Excellency's name and titles (with the exception of an E omitted) is every way correct. As to Copernicus's manner of tormenting the names of the General and the Military under his command, it affects us citizens (country people I should have said) so little, that I would freely forgive double the number of such errors, for the benefits he has conferred on the public, by communicating the methods to make Lady Darby's Soap, and preventing Females catching Fire!

P.S.—I am apprehensive S was not on service during the two Winter campaigns our Militia had, else he would have been better acquainted with Military phrases. He very kindly excuses many of Copernicus's faults on account of his non-residence at HEAD-QUARTERS:—in this S is quite out; for Copernicus's residence has been at Head-Quarters the greater part of the present year, and probably will be to the end of it: and can boast too, of having resided an equal length of time at the Seat of Government. So much information for S, from

FREDERICTON, (N. B.)

22^D DECEMBER, 1818.

On Friday morning last this town was alarmed by the cry of Fire! which was found to issue from a dwelling-house, the property of the Miss ALLENS, and occupied by them. The engines were immediately drawn to the scene of destruction, and every effort was made by the inhabitants and military to extinguish the flames, but to no effect. In the space of two hours the building was razed to the ground: several articles of furniture, together with beds and bedding, were consumed. The fire originated in the upper part of the building, (occasioned, we understand, by the parting of a stove-pipe which run through the gable) and had got to a considerable height before it was discovered. The house was situate in the upper part of the Town, and no buildings near it, except the barn, which, by great exertion, was prevented from receiving the slightest injury.

London papers have been received in New-York to the 22d October, which state, that "Her MAJESTY was still alive; but no hopes were entertained of her recovery."
