ON FRIENDSHIP.

Is there a charm on earth so sweet,
As that which warms the glowing heart, When kindred friends each other greet,
Or give the cordial squeeze to part?

Friendship! rich guest, to thee we owe Full half the smiling joys of life;
Thy soothing balm relieves our woe,
And banes away, with soft and strife.

'Tis thou that quell the angry storm,
And lull the passions of the breast;
A virtuous world from vice reform,
And lull the troubled soul to rest.

On thee, as on a bed of down, Sorrow may swoon its tears away;
Thy charms dispel the sullen frown,
And bid the child of grief be gay.

Yes, gentle partner, cheering guest,
That strews our path with sweetest joy, Thy smiles can make the mourner blest,
And envy's fiercer shafts destroy.

THE COUNTRY LASS,
A SKETCH!

THE sky was clear, the sun had passed its meridian, the fields were verdant, the flocks bleated in the valley, and Nature's livery wore a pleasing smile. Could a country lass, educated in the bosom of Nature, and an admirer of its charms, withstand the temptation for rambling, at this delightful season, and on so charming a day? I roved into the meadows; fancy directed my steps towards the industrious husband-man; contemplation upon the goodness of heaven, in crowning his labours with such full grown crops, and with abundant plenty, to supply his like industrious family with bread, so wholly occupied my mind, that my feet strayed, I knew not whither.

The birds chanting their notes, and each winged songster caroling the praises of its creator, awoke me from my reverie. I found myself in a wood, where flowers of different hues and fragrance, adorned each hillside; and the banks of a rivulet boasted innumerable charms: in its clear mirror the neighboring beauties were reflected; and over its pure bosom the barge of pleasure glided.

After wandering a little while I found myself in an open field. The wild spontaneous flowers diversified the path that led to a small, though neat and well cultivated garden; where nature refined, was visible in every part: the meandering rivulet softly stole along between the rose-bush and hawthorn; at a little distance the branches of some trees were entwined together: the honeysuckle and belline crept over them and afforded a friendly shade. The favorite of Flora adorned the whole of this sequestered spot; a neat little cot arose to view—I entered it without the usual ceremony of knocking; for the doors were open, and seemed to say to the weary traveller, "thou art welcome."

"Why are you immured in this solitude?" said I, to an elegant and lovely female, who offered me a seat.

"To partake of happiness, and to watch a parent's declining years," replied the amiable Fanny; "this humble dwelling is the abode of peace and content, though not of splendor." I ran over her features with an exquisite look—a melancholy, which over-spread her countenance, rendered it mild and interesting—a lively eye denoted quick penetration, solid sense, and a good heart. I apologized for my abrupt visit, and begged her to gratify me with a relation of some of the incidents of her life.

"My father," said this charming girl, "was an eminent merchant in —; the smiles of fortune attended him for many years; opulence and domestic harmony rendered us supremely happy; continual losses in trade reduced our fortune to a mere competency. An elder sister, an amiable girl, was cleft like a flower in the bloom of youth: she fell, a wretched victim to hopeless love. Unfortunately, she had contracted an attachment to a young man of merit; but such was her extreme delicacy, that she kept the fatal secret till a few moments before her dissolution. It was then too late to restore her life. Only the shade of a beloved daughter, an affectionate sister, remained. My mother, oppressed by misfortunes, sunk beneath their weight; and six months after, my sister bid a tender husband, and me, an only remaining child, a long adieu. It was then my care to console a father, and to watch his feeble age with unremitting attention.

"We left the crowd and bustle of the metropolis and sought an asylum, a relief from sorrow, in this village. In the summer, my garden affords me amusement; and in the winter, by a social fire, my aged father will repeat some of the adventures of his youth; or I, from some book in our small library, will find amusement for him and myself which ealivens the long evenings."

Who would relinquish this delightful life for the splendid ball, or brilliant circle the metropolis boasts? Here reside innocence and peace; there envy and discord. In strolling into the wood, here each misfortune, that imbitters the cup of life, is forgotten; and the celestial ray of happiness streams through this frail mansion of mortality, subliming all our sufferings.

Most of the virtues that adorn the pages of human nature are found in the retired cottage; and its mild influence will ever shake from the troubled heart the heavy dews of sorrow.
