The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

To the Members of our great National Establishments, the Army and the Navy, to which under Providence our Country owes her prosperity, and Europe her safety, it has ever been the care of the Society to afford the instructions and consolations of Religion. The friends of the Church will be gratified by the information, that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have lately engaged to defray the expence of all the Bibles, Prayer Books, and Tracts, which the Chaplain General may at any time require from the Society for the use of our gallant seamen. In regard to the Army (to quote from the Annual Report for 1812) the late excellent Regulations of H. R. H. "the Commander-in-Chief have in a great degree superseded all solicitude, and left scarcely any thing further to be desired " by the most anxious friends of a sober, " pious, and religious education."

Relieved in some measure from the constant demand upon its funds from these quarters, the Society has within these few years, made a general call upon the Parochial Clergy and other Subscribers to ascertain the spiritual wants of the poor in the Work houses, Hospitals, and Prisons, within their respective parishes, in order, to afford a gratuitous supply of books to such as are not provided with any proper fund for the purchase of them. From the outset, indeed, of its holy career, the attention of the Society has ever been directed, as occasion required, and as its means allowed, to the religious edification of the inhabitants of these abodes of wretchedness. The first formation of Schools in Work houses, and the introduction of Divine Service into Prisons, are mainly owing to the joint recommendation and assistance of the Society. And, what higher praise can be given to it than to record, that in obedience to the command, and in humble and faithful following of the steps of our Blessed Master, it has made it its invariable purpose that to the Poor, under every circumstance of sin and sorrow, the Gospel of Peace should be proclaimed: their surest consolation in sickness and want, their surest support and aid in penitence and prayer; their only hope amid the gloom of desertion, and under the impending terrors of death.

Nor has Kindred or Country prescribed a limit to its charitable exertions. The Society has not only translated the Scriptures, &c. into the Welch, Irish, Mank, and Gaelic Tongues, but into those of Portugal, France, Denmark, and Germany. The Protestants in the latter country, when suffering under persecution, it promptly afforded temporal as well as spiritual comfort. It has, moreover, extended its regard to the Greek Church in Palestine, Syria, Mesopotamia, Arabia, and Egypt. Nor let it be forgotten, that, when by the severe fortune of war our enemies have become our prisoners, and have been for a time shut out from communion with their own Church, then has the holy zeal of the Society cheered the gloom of their captivity, and, by supplies of Bibles, Psalters, and Prayer Books, in their own vernacular language, enabled and encouraged them to sing the Song of their Zion in a strange, yet hospitable land.

Wherever, on the other hand, the spirit of our commerce, enriching and enriched, has formed Colonies and Dependencies, thither has the Society been zealous to convey the sound doctrines of our National Creed. Of its Missions to the East Indies, it were superfluous to say more in this place, than that the reader of the volume upon the subject hereafter mentioned in the twelfth class of its publications will rise from its perusal with a stronger attachment, if possible, to a Society which has long and strenuously supported so pure, so rational, so Apostolical an institution. He will see, that this noblest effort of pious philanthropy commenced with a zeal free from the wild uproar of enthusiasm; that it has ever since been prosecuted with an energy, restrained only by a sound discretion; and that it is still animated by a pure and holy fervor, tempered, however, by a tenderness to the feelings of a weak brother, and by a due respect to the sacred rights of conscience. He will acknowledge the wisdom of a Society, which pursues such high behests without interfering in the secular concerns of Heathen nations, sedulous only to shew to those who are in error the heavenly light of Gospel Truth; and visiting those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, only to give this light unto their minds, and to guide their feet into the way of spiritual peace. He will become more earnest in the support of a Society, which has obtained from the ready and respectful attention of the Government, as the perfection and crown of its endeavors, the formation, in those interesting settlements, of an Ecclesiastical Establishment, consentaneous in doctrine, and conformed in discipline to our own; which, while it affords to our countrymen the happiness of an English Sabbath in a remote region of the world, is admirably calculated, though silently, yet most persuasively, to attract by its simplicity, and to encourage by its purity the natives of the surrounding districts to contemplate, to examine, to approve, and in due time to imitate the decent solemnities of Public Worship exhibited in the rites and ordinances of the Church of England. May every blessing attend this glorious effort to enlighten by rational conviction a peaceful, a pious, but, uninstructed or misguided people! May they be converted thereby from the frantic and horrible worship of base idols, supposed to delight in their torture, and to glory in their blood; to the living God, merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin; to a Saviour, relinquishing the beatitude of heaven, and laying down his life for his sinful creatures; to the Holy Spirit, reclaiming the lost prodigal, infusing the holy wish, prompting the secret prayer, and gently leading back the self-condemned wanderer into the path of righteousness and peace!

Such are the undisputed claims of the Society to the general gratitude and support of every friend to virtue and religion, especially of those whose minds, after serious thought and attentive observation, are convinced that practical morality is no where better taught, and rational piety no where more, fully manifested than within the pale of the Church of England. So extensively, so zealously, and (under the guiding mercies of Providence) so successfully has the Society for more than a century contributed, at home and abroad, to the diffusion and to the maintenance of Christian Knowledge, and Christian Practice.

How happens it then, it may well be asked, that such an Institution should not have been long since universally known, and adequately supported in its high and holy career of beneficence? It was in the true character of its founders that, according to the genuine, spirit of Christian charity, they vaunted not themselves. And, therefore, while Africa, and America, and Asia to the farthest India, seeing its good works, blessed its fostering care: its name had scarcely penetrated, with its deeds of piety and charity, into the recesses of its own country: While the streams of its charity adorned and fertilized, and gladdened in their course thousands of its native villages, the parent spring was unheeded in the silent vallies through which they flowed. As the Society acted always in harmonious co-operation with the Ministers of the National Church, those who distributed its stores most largely, were too generally considered as the almoners of their own bounty alone, without reference to the Treasury, which contributed
