

SELECTED POETRY.

THE HAPPY FARMER.

How happy the farmer who toils through the day,
And dismisses his cares with the Sun's parting
ray;
The cares of the great never mar his repose;
But with peace and contentment his heart o'er-flows.

The lark's early carol awakes him at morn,
Or the robin that sings from the sweet blooming thorn,
He goes to his toil with a heart full of glee—
Of all nature's sons none so happy as he.

And when day's bright orb has declined to the west,
And night's murky shades bid him go to his rest,
He repairs to his cot, where contentment resides,
And hails the blest scene where his happiness' bides.

His spouse with sweet smiles gently welcome him
home;
His prattlers rejoice when they see their sire come;
He eats of the bread which his hands have prepar'd;
Of peace and industry the plentiful reward.

Thus his days sweetly pass as old time rolls away,
Till his spirit must leave its frail cottage of clay:
He cheerly submits to the general doom,
And with a pure conscience descends to the tomb.

LAW ANECDOTE.

Some time before the abolition of the Jesuits, a gentleman in Paris died, and left all his estate from an only son then abroad, to that body of religious men, on condition that, on his return, the worthy fathers should give him whatever they should choose.—When the son came home, he went to the convent and received a very small share indeed;
the wise sons of Loyola choosing to keep the greatest part to themselves. The young gentleman consulted his friends, and all agreed he was without remedy. At last a barrister, to whom he happened to mention his case, advised him to sue the convent.
The gentleman followed his advice, and the suit terminated in his favor through the management of the advocate, who grounded his plea on this reasoning:—"The testator," says he, "has left his son that share of the estate which the fathers should choose.—Now 'tis plain what part they have chosen, by what they keep to themselves. My client then stands on the words of the will.—Let me have, says he, the part they have chosen, and I am satisfied."
It was accordingly awarded to him without hesitation.
