

POETRY.

By J. Lee Lewis.

To the Memory of—J. P. PALM, Bookseller of Nuremberg, Who was shot, by sentence of a Court Martial, at Brannan. If a wish o'er the mandate of fate could prevail,

'Tis lovely to gaze on the banner-spread plain, When the war-blast of freedom bursts wild on the soul,

'Tis proud in the battle to mix with the brave; O'er the tombs of our sires, with their spirits to glow,

To rush where the falchions of victory wave, Or fiercely to grapple in death with the foe!

Yet prouder thy doom, though no anthem arose, Though thy limbs with the felon's dark fetters were bound—

No breathings of mercy the whisper repose— No forms but the demons of murder around.

The tyrant in carnage his falchion may steep; His spirit may drink of Ambition's mad bowl; His soul on the death scene of thousands may sleep,

But the blood of a Patriot shall never depart; And freedom, her martyr exulting, shall own, The curse of his destiny withers the heart,

ANECDOTE.

At a certain period of the late war, a merchant vessel, loaded with grain, bound to Cardigan, in Wales, was taken in the English Channel, by an American privateer. When the Captain descended into the cabin to visit his prize, he perceived a small box with an opening on the top, resembling a counter in which money is put.

Burnt Tongue in Horses and Cattle.

This disease has prevailed some time in various parts of Kentucky, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and New-Jersey; and the papers received this morning from Sandlake, Cooperstown, Troy and Hudson, state that it is now prevailing in those places.

Dissolve two ounces Copperas and two ounces Alum in a pint of strong Vinegar; swab the mouth and tongue with the solution until the disease is removed; then dissolve Honey and Alum in Vinegar, and use it in the way to heal the tongue.

The hand of the generous man is like the clouds of heaven, which drop upon the earth, fruits, herbage and flowers; but the heart of the ungrateful is like a desert of sand, which swalloweth with greediness the showers that fall and burieeth them in its bosom and produceth nothing.

Cure for an eating Cancer. Take the leaves of balm of gilead, beat them up and bind them to the wound. Another. File up old pure brass, put a spoonful in a vessel, make a plaster of the filed brass and mutton suet, lay the plaster on the wound, which must not be removed until it is quite well—

Dialogue between two Neighbors. SCENE—A Bar Room.

Reason—Good mornow neighbour Thoughtless; I see you have the newspaper. Pray what news this morning?

Thoughtless.—O nothing, only the Printer is plaguing us for money again. I only owe him 3 dollars; and he has sent for it a half a dozen times; and is now dunning in his paper.

Reason.—A great shame too for you not to pay such a trifling sum. He had use for the money, no doubt, or he would not have asked for it.

Thoughtless.—Use for the d—l; he must be very poor indeed, if he has to send a mile for two or three dollars. Besides I consider it an insult to be bored in this way by a Printer. Does he think I'll run off.

Reason.—I always thought you had more sense than to express yourself in this manner. The printer had no tho't of your running off, but he cannot live without being paid for his labor; and no doubt he tried a hundred before he sent to you, and received the same answer you gave him.

Thoughtless.—I don't care if he asked a thousand; and I can't see what great use he has for so much money, at any rate! his expences are nothing; and besides, money is too scarce with us now to give to him.

Reason.—There's another absurd remark. I know a printer's expence, (who publishes a paper once a week) amounts to upwards of twelve dollars a week for workmen, nearly the same sum for paper and ink; besides a family to maintain and other expences. Now, if this can be all done without money, I'll give up.

Thoughtless.—Well suppose now he does incur all these expences which would amount to upwards of 1000 dollars a year, and has 3 or 400 subscribers, with advertising custom, it must be devilish strange if he is not well paid for printing a parcel of nonsense.

Reason.—There's no reason in you, that's plain, or you would not use such language. If the printer had the support you mention, and his subscribers would all treat him as you do, what would become of him. If he were a man possessing an independent fortune, he might work two or three years for NOTHING; but even that would be unjust; this money might be put on interest, and still be accumulating; while by letting it stand he is daily loosing by failures and removals.

Thoughtless.—Hang it, I believe your words are correct. I'll go and pay him. But here he comes. Landlord; give us a bottle of wine, we must have a swig together.

Reason.—Money's not scarce with you now—that bottle of wine would nearly pay the printer one year.

Thoughtless.—Hush! here he comes, and I may expect to be dun'd again.
