We had been wont (says an Irish Editor) to contemplate Napoleon Buonaparte as the finest subject for contemplation that mental or moral philosophy could select. To look upon him, surrounded as he was by faults and crimes, as a day-star that shone for glory; as the beacon that led on to Valour; and whilst we almost shuddered from the rapacious ruin that marked his course to conquest; we beheld in him so much of greatness, so much of the undaunted spirit that lived for itself alone—that was “alike exempt

From all affection and from all contempt,”

that our admiration was often blended with an imperishable regret, that that power which formed him for the astonishment of the age he lived in, had not also endowed him with those attributes which should have claimed its revenge! It was thus that in the day of his pride, we regarded him—but in his adversity we forgot all his faults, in the splendid radiance that his magnanimity and endurance shed around him. It was in these moments that he almost won us into enthusiasm; and we beheld him more glorious in his solitary and loveless exile, submitting to every privation without a murmur, and walking unshrinkingly through the fire of his destiny; than when enthroned in all the splendour that was designed for the decoration of the pseudo Emperor of the West; but the delusion is fled, and his own hands tore away the veil that dazzled us; and how? not by preferring a complaint, altho' even complaint would, at one period of his life have astonished us; but by the nature and unworthiness of that complaint. There was we believe a day when the destructive frosts of Russia could not wring a groan from his proud heart; when want of even natural rest was held as a trifle; when even hunger, fatigue, and what was worse, when baffled hope could not force away one murmur, but “still undaunted, he endured and dared!” but now the great, unconquerable mind, that bore him towering above his fortune, has sunk under its own weight; and reduced him to the level of ordinary mortality.

FREDERICTON, (N. B.)

18TH SEPTEMBER, 1821.

Agreeable to promise, we have devoted the greater part of our paper of this day to the proceedings of the Coronation of His Majesty King GEORGE the FOURTH, which we have no doubt will be read with interest by every friend to the British Constitution.

MR. EDITOR.—In looking over your paper of Tuesday last, I observed a piece signed “ONE OF THE PEOPLE,” requesting to be informed whether the Grand Jury of York had done their duty in not presenting at their last sitting, as a nuisance, a certain drain.—Permit me to inform him through the medium of your paper, that they executed their duty with such assiduity, that the presiding Judge passed a very high encomium on them for the zeal they manifested in the discharge of it.—I was present at the time of their dismissal and heard it—still, as they transact their business by themselves, and are sworn to secrecy, I cannot be expected to account for the reason why they passed over the nuisance in question, only by conjecture. I would give it as my opinion then, either that none of them had noticed it, or that they had an assurance that it should be immediately attended to. A. D.

M. discovered a schooner on the lee bow, standing towards us, hailed her without receiving an answer. Ordered us to heave too, being then within pistol shot, and when in the act of tacking concluded to continue our course.—A musket was then fired at us and immediately afterwards two great guns, the shot of one of them passed through the trysail, mainsail, and foresail—cut away the main boom, topmast, fore cat harpins, flings and trusses of the fore yard, and one of the foretop-sail sheet quarter blocks, one of the fore pendants and several ropes of the running rigging. She appeared only to have one gun, and that mounted amidships. Finding our vessel leaving them fast, they ceased firing and gave chase. At daylight he was not in sight from the mast head.—Spoke, lat. 37, long 68, brig Madeira, of Liverpool, N. Boston, August 25.

From St. Domingo.—Capt. Daggett, who arrived at New-York, on the 15th inst. states that a Courier arrived at Port au Plat on 20th July, from the city of St. Domingo bringing the determination of the Cortes to encourage the cultivators of Spanish St. Domingo, by opening the ports and permitting the exportation of Coffee, Tobacco, and Hides free of duty. With a view of inducing the natives to cultivate the soil instead of cutting Mahogany, the duty on this article is doubled which amounts to a prohibition of the export.

GRECIAN FLEET.—Capt. Church, from Smyrna, informs, that on the 5th June, off the island of Scio, he fell in with a Grecian fleet of 50 sail, bound to Mytelene, to attack the Turkish squadron said to be there, consisting of 14 sail. If not found there, the Grecians were to go in quest of them to Constantinople.

NEW-YORK, AUG 15.

BOUNDARY LINE.—The Board of Commissioners under the 5th Article of the Treaty of Ghent, has been several days in session in this city, for the purpose of hearing the answers of the respective Agents to the opening arguments of each other, and have adjourned to the next month, for the purpose of receiving replies, which will probably so far advance the business, that it will be ready for such decision as the Commissioners may think proper to make.

We learn that the principal points in dispute are, whether the northern boundary of Maine is to be carried by the Treaty to the North or South of St. John's River; whether the State of New-Hampshire, or the Province of Lower Canada, shall be entitled to the land lying between the different sources of Connecticut River; and whether the north line of New York and Vermont, shall be again surveyed, and in what manner. These are manifestly questions, which, if doubtful, are of great importance, and which we hope will be settled in a way the best calculated to inspire confidence in this amicable mode of terminating national controversies, such as in other ages and in other countries have generally found their ultimate adjustment in appeals to force.
