HOUSE OF LORDS, MAY 22.

TIMBER DUTIES BILL.

On the Order of the Day, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee on this Bill.

Earl Bathurst entered into an explanation of the circumstances which induced his Majesty's Ministers to bring forward this measure in its present shape. It would be recollected, that in the year 1809 we were altogether excluded from any trade with the Baltic. At that time, in consequence of such exclusion, it was thought necessary to give encouragement to our own Colonies to furnish us with Timber, and for that purpose, additional Duties were laid on Timber imported from the Continent of Europe.
Those Duties expired in 1820, before that time, it became necessary to give notice, that new arrangements should be made.
The effect of this notice was, that very large quantities of Timber were imported from the North of Europe and from North America. The notice had been given about the end of the year 1817; and in the course of the year 1818, the quantity of Timber imported amounted to 333,000 loads; whereas the quantity imported during the preceding year, amounted to no more than 77,900 loads. In the year 1819, a still greater importation took place, not only from the Baltic, but from North America; and after all these importations there was no increase of demand. The consequence was, that great embarrassments took place in the trade, which embarrassments could not be considered as arising out of Duties. Here the Noble Earl entered into a variety of explanations and details with a view of shewing the policy of encouraging the importation of Timber from the Colonies, as well as from the North of Europe. The most material part of this subject was that which related to the imperative Duties on Timber imported from the Colonies and the Baltic; and it was on all hands admitted, that some protection ought to be given to the Colonies, on account of the exertions that had been made to import Timber from them, during our exclusion from the European Continent.
But it was not understood that this was to be a permanent arrangement; it might be proper to revive the question again at the expiration of three or four years. He could not agree to the doctrine, that persons were to be allowed to go and get their goods at the cheapest rate; for such a principle might be very hostile to our interests. The principle was not adopted with regard to linens or corn; for laws were made which gave a preference in these articles to those of our own country. Our whole Colonial system was at variance with that general principle, and it was fit that every possible degree of encouragement should be given to our Colonies in regard to the Timber Trade, although that trade brought in only a comparative small amount of income. This was the more necessary on account of many persons being now employed in carrying on that trade in the Colonies, who could not be employed in any other way. Besides, their Lordships, should consider the great advantage arising from this trade in the encouragement given to our own shipping, which were
