

should be laid on until the last moment; but the gilding and stucco materials are all on the spot, and every thing indicates the truth of the rumour that the coronation will take place in the ensuing summer. The great alterations now carrying on in Westminster Hall by the Board of Works, are in the repairs of the ancient roof, many parts of which, upon perforating the timber for suspending the chandeliers for the coronation, were found so rotten, that the safety of this noble roof, which, for its mechanism and antiquity, has become so justly celebrated, required an immediate separation of the decayed parts, and the fitting in of substantial joinings to complete the frame-work. A general survey of the roof lately took place in consequence of the discovery of this decay, and the oak (which, according to popular tradition, was first impudged by William Rufus) was found mostly sound, but the cherry tree rafters were worm eaten; they have been in consequence all taken down and renewed. It was deemed right in the progress of the work to take down the old lantern, which illuminated the Hall from the top of the roof. Its weight was found to have made an impression on the roof, and the taking it down was a difficult and rather perilous work, from the enormous quantity of lead which was clumsily used in its original manufacture. A new lantern is now erecting in its stead, of a light and more useful form. Instead of lead, sheet iron is used with the timber frame work, still preserving the Gothic form, so essential to the unity of the structure. In three weeks it is calculated that the whole repairs will be finished, and then the upholstery part will alone remain for completion. Six weeks notice will be necessary between the issuing of the Proclamation and Coronation. And it is said, that if it shall occur during the sitting of Parliament, the Commons, as of ancient courtesy, will be entitled to seats in the Hall.

CONSTANTINOPLE, MARCH 5.

A concurrence of circumstances, which, according to some persons, is a mere effect of chance, while others see in it the result of political combinations, appears calculated to increase daily the internal embarrassments in which the Ottoman Porte has been entangled for some time. The war in Albania, commenced last Spring, is not yet terminated: and already Servia has claimed, some months since, important privileges; and the demand was made with a degree of confidence, which made it necessary to comply with it. Perhaps these privileges, most unwillingly conceded, will but half satisfy the wishes of the inhabitants of that Province. Serious disorders have broken out in the countries near to Persia, which have required the employment of a very considerable proportion of the Ottoman forces. In Arabia, the Wechabites have assembled their hordes, and threaten a new war. In these difficult conjunctures, and at a moment when the Porte was, as it were, on the point of finding itself in urgent need of the forces under Mahomet Ali, the Viceroy of Egypt, to oppose them to the wandered hordes, which his son Ismael Pacha had before conquered, it has imprudently threatened that powerful Chief with a maritime expedition, with a view, if not wholly to strip him of his power, at least (which would be the same to him) to deprive him of his treasures, which it unwillingly sees in his hands. This step being taken, whether the Expedition takes place or not, Mahomet Ali, well aware of the intention of the Porte towards him, can no longer be considered but as an enemy, more or less avowedly. While the Government was already oppressed by so many burdens, an insurrection broke out in Wallachia. At first it was hoped that it would be speedily suppressed; but we now learn that it has extended to Moldavia, and threatens to extend to all the countries of the empire, which are not Mussulmen; and that it is the result of a plan to separate all the Greek provinces from the Ottoman dominion. To the obscure leader, the Wallachian Theodore, who first raised the standard of revolt, has succeeded the young Ypselanti, a name equally distinguished and honored among the Greeks, and son of the Hospodar, who was for a long time a refugee in Russia. A young Prince in the flower of his age may have at once two objects in view, to change the fate of the whole Greek nation, and to avenge the long proscription of a father, whose flight and exile he shared; and above all, the blood of a grandfather who, in his old age, was torn from his retreat on the Bosphorus, and almost in the midst of his whole family loaded with chains, stripped of his possessions, and inhumanly put to death by the Porte. Such an enemy may become very formidable to the Porte. There is, besides, every reason to apprehend that Wallachia and Moldavia, which now but half recognise its supremacy, may force it to act with a degree of reserve which will paralyze all its means of action, and that thus the troubles in those provinces may have the most fatal consequences for the fate of the Empire. So many causes united may lead to important events in the East; they are at least more than sufficient to rouse the Divan from its usual apathy, and cause it to supply all the resources of its policy, and the greater part of the military force at its disposal.

Extract of a Letter from St. Peters, (Bay Chaleur) dated 5th inst.

"There was a very melancholy event took place yesterday; William Crawford, Esq. a Judge of the Supreme Court at Carleton Place, came here on Sunday last, and put up at Mr. Charles Doucett's, he had been deranged in mind for some time before, and on Monday morning took his breakfast and went out—was soon after discovered by some boys in the field who thought his nose was bleeding by seeing him standing with a handkerchief to his face—about two hours after, he was found laying, and in a very weak condition from the loss of blood, he was immediately taken to Mr. Doucett's house, where the wound was sewed up, which was about an inch deep, (he had not cut the jugular vein,) he was then put in bed—he seemed quite sensible of, and sorry for what he had done, and told how long he had been wishing to destroy himself, he rested some that night, talked sensible, free, and appeared penitent;—this morning he was taken with great pain—told the people around him the distress at his heart would not suffer him to live long, which was too true, for he died about 20 minutes after two o'clock in great agony, though sensible and could talk so as to be understood within two minutes of his dissolution."

The ships FAVORITE, Willie, and DUNLOP, Brown, which sailed on Sunday last for Scotland, returned yesterday afternoon, owing to head winds.—The Favorite, in coming into the harbor struck on the Foul Ground, where she remained for some time—Prompt assistance being rendered by the Crews from the Vessels in Port, and the tide being flood, she was got into the harbor before night.—The damage sustained is not yet ascertained.—City Gazette, 19th June.
