

POETRY.

OH WHERE IS THE SPOT?

Oh where is the spot, where my juvenile hours,
In pleasure and innocence glided away?
Oh where is the field that was cover'd with flowers, Where my youthful companions erected their bowers,
Where my heart free from sorrow was happy and gay.

Oh where is the willow—the wide spreading willow,
That shaded the spot, where I first saw the light?
And where the fond parent who watch'd o'er my pillow,
Ere I had embark'd on life's rugged billow, Or known a sensation but that of delight?

Ah! past are those moments—those flowers have fled,
And fled, the bright scenes that enchanted my breast,
The vision has vanish'd—the willow is dead!
And sorrow has laid her cold hand on the head, Of him who in childhood was happy and bless'd.

But tho' doom'd to wander, a balm is provided,
A fountain of mercy continues to flow—Let man thro' the vale, by RELIGION be guided,
For, when the rude tempest of life has subsided, A bright crown of glory will Heaven bestow.

'Tis pain to reflect at the close of the day,
On the valuable moments we thoughtlessly spurn;
Yet to-morrow shall pass as neglected away,
And we'll sigh and lament that it cannot return.
A day hastens on shall arrest this career So strangely perverse from a Bankrupt to borrow, Accounts shall be clos'd to wind up a last year,
And a last check be drawn on the hopes of to-morrow.

Wit by the wayside.—In the neighbourhood of Haddam Castle, Dumfriesshire, there is a tower called Repentance. A pleasant answer of a shepherd's boy, to Sir Richard Steele, founded on the name of this tower, is related. Sir Richard, having observed a boy lying on the ground, and very attentively reading his Bible, asked if he could tell him the way to Heaven? "Yes, Sir," answered the boy, "you must go by that tower."

AN IRISHMAN'S INITIALS.

An Irishman meeting an acquaintance one morning, after the usual salutations, addressed him as follows:—"So Barney, I see my coat has made a d—l of a mistake this morning." "Mistake! how?" replied the other. "Why, man, it has by some accident or other, got on your back when it should have been on mine." "Thunder and Tombstones! you tief, me stale your coat! Blood and buttermilk! if you dares wag your muzzle to that tune again, I'll make every bug on your body a cripple for life."
The first, nothing intimidated by the threats of his opponent, quickly replied, "No squalls, Barney, no north-westerns, but just be aisy, and give me my coat, or here is his Worship the Justice, and he shall decide whose coat it is." And at that instant the magistrate made his appearance—and Paddy, without any circumlocution lodged a detainer against the portion of his wardrobe he found astray, and the other as loudly asserted his right to the garment in question. The magistrate having at length obtained a hearing, by silencing these noisy lu-gants, addressed the complainer in the following terms: "What is your name, friend?" "Pat Purdie, please your honor." "Well, Mr. Purdie, what proof have you that the coat in question is yours?"
"Please your honor, my initials are on it." "Your initials! let me see them." Pat took out his knife, and ripping up a part of the sleeve at the wrist, took out two peas, which he placed in the magistrate's hand with an air of triumph. "What do these mean, my friend?" was the first question. "Mans, your honor? why isn't there Pae for Pat, and Pae for Purdie? sure." It is almost unnecessary to add, that the evidence was considered conclusive in Pat's favor, and the coat restored to its right owner.

We understand a man by the name of SREWART, died a few days since at Maga-gandavick, after eating some clams; and we see by the St. John Star, that a person there has fallen a victim in the same manner; we are sorry to add to the melancholy list, the demise of THOMAS GILTS, a marine late of H. M. Brig Belleisle; his death was occasioned by eating muscles, supposed to contain something poisonous; every medical aid was promptly afforded, but proved of no avail, as he breathed his last in half an hour after eating them, in L'Etang harbour.—Two others were attacked with sickness from the same cause, but happily recovered. Muscles or clams cannot with safety be eaten raw—as there is no way in that case to detect the poison. If they are boiled, a piece of silver should be put in the utensil with them, and should any poison exist, it will be easily discovered by the discoloration of the metal, which otherwise would experience no change.—St.
Andrews Herald.

A gentleman of strict veracity, residing on the Capitol hill, informs us, that about two o'clock on Thursday afternoon, some flakes of snow, fell, of sufficient consistency to determine, with certainty, the fact. We believe the meteorological journals of this latitude, do not record so extraordinary a phenomenon, nor does the oldest inhabitant recollect a July (generally so oppressively warm) to be so cold and rainy as at present.
Fires, for several days past, have been necessary to render a sitting room comfortable.
And yet in less than a fortnight back (the 25th of June) the mercury rose to 90 degrees.—Washington Gazette, July 7.
