

POETRY.

THE RELIGIOUS COTTAGE.

In the following stanzas there is nothing of the tempest of religion—nothing that responds to that bitterness and strife which sometimes ruffles the spirit even of the good man, when "all is off the poise within;" but they exhibit that calm, placid, unaffected domestic piety, which prepares him who practises it for the every-day duties of life, and produces that happy frame of mind which enables him to join his fellow Christian with cordial affection, in the more public worship of their common Father.

Seest thou yon lonely cottage in the grove—
With little garden neatly plann'd before—
Its roof, deep shaded by the elms above,
Moss-grown and deck'd with velvet verdure o'er?
Go, lift the willing latch—the scene explore—
Sweet peace, and love, and joy, thou there shalt find:
For there Religion dwells; whose sacred lore
Leaves the proud wisdom of the world behind,
And pours a heav'nly ray on every humble mind

When the bright morning glides the eastern skies,
Up springs the peasant from his calm repose;
Forth to his honest toil he cheerful lies,
And tastes the sweets of nature as he goes—
But first, of Shaon's fairest, sweetest Rose,
He breathes the fragrance, and pours forth the praise:
Looks to the source whence ev'ry blessing flows,
Ponders the page which heav'nly truth conveys,
And to its author's hand commits his future ways.

Nor yet in solitude his prayers ascend;
His faithful partner and their blooming train,
The precious word with rev'rent minds attend,
The Heav'n-directed path of life to gain.
Their voices mingle in the grateful strain—
The lay of love and joy together sing,
To Him whose bounty clothes the smiling plain,
Who spreads the beauties of the blooming spring,
And tunes the wrabbling throats that makes the vallies ring.

From the N. York Evening Post.
On the late discovery of M. Baragozzi, an Italian of Verona, to restore cracked bells to their original sound, without resounding.
Crack'd bells, they say, may be restored,
To tones both loud and shrill;
Baragozzi's art each fault has cured,
Without the founder's skill.

But Belles whose reputation's crack'd,
Whose sound's no longer pure—
What brain, by thought or study rack'd,
Has ever found a cure?

Secret well kept.

It was originally customary for the senators of Rome to take their sons along with them into the senate. On one occasion, Papyrus Prætaxalus, having accompanied his father thither, heard an affair of great importance discussed, the termination of which was deferred till the following day, the strictest injunctions being given, that in the mean time no one should divulge a syllable of the matter in hand. When young Papyrus went home, his mother asked him, "what the fathers had done that day in the senate?" He answered, "that it was a secret which he could not disclose." The curiosity of the lady was only the more stimulated by this denial, and she pressed the boy so hard, that to get rid of her importunities, he was driven to make use of the following pleasant fiction: "It was," said he, "debated in the senate, which would be more advantageous to the common wealth: that one man should have two wives, or that one woman should have two husbands?" The lady wonderfully started by this singular piece of information, instantly left the house, and told what she had discovered, to a number of ladies, among whom the projected change in their condition was discussed with no small degrees of vehemence and alarm.

Having so deep an interest in the decision of the question, they thought it but right that the senate should know their feelings respecting it: and next day accordingly they went in a body, and surrounding the doors of the senate, cried out with vast clamor, "that rather than one man should marry two women, one woman should marry two men." The senators were in great astonishment at this strange cry; and sent out to know what the woman meant? On this young Papyrus stepped forth, and told them what his mother had desired to know, and how he had contrived to answer her. The senators were much amused with the youth's explanation and after sending away the women, with an assurance that nothing was at present intended to be done in the affair to which they alluded, they marked their sense of young Papyrus' wit and secrecy, by passing an order, that in future no son of a senator should be admitted to their meeting. Papyrus excepted.
